THE REJECTED ARMISTICE.

M. Thiers' Report on the Negotiations—The Imperial Government Forever Defunct—Discussion of the Various Points.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Times publishes THIERS' report on his armistice mission. He says he deems that he owes to the Great Powers, who desired an armistice should be concluded, a succinct account of the grave negotiations which he consented to undertake. He mentions the desolation of the country through which he passed, going from Orleans to Versailles, at which latter place he stopped but one moment.

PRUSSIA AWARE OF HIS MISSION.

He proceeded forthwith to Paris, stopping at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to confer with the Government, passed the night in deliberation, and the next morning, the 1st of November, went to meet BISMARCK, who was perfectly aware of the nature of his mission, as he had received at the same time that France had the notice from the Powers that an armistice was desired to avoid the effusion of blood, and to allow France, through elections, to form a regular Government with which to treat effectively. This was all the more evident, from the fact that Prussia had pretended that, owing to the situation of France, she knew not to whom to apply.

AN ALLUSION TO THE EMPEROR.

BISMARCK made casual mention that the remains of the Government now at Cassel was the only one recognized by Europe; that he, however, merely made the remark to establish the diplomatic situation, having no intention to meddle with the internal management of France. THIERS immediately answered that the Government which precipitated France into the abyss of war so foolishly resolved upon, had forever terminated its existence with its fatal career at Sedan, and would be for France but a remembrance of shame and grief.

THE POINTS TREATED FOR.

BISMARCK did not contest the fact, and made, with me, an examination of the following questions of the armistice proposed:

To furnish France time for the expression of her will as to the Government she should choose to have.

To allow entire freedom for the elections during the armistice, and also for the organization of the armies.

Lastly, To permit the revictualing of the besieged places, and especially of Paris.

NO OBJECTION TO THEM.

BISMARCK seemed to have no insurmountable objections to allow any of these questions, and after an interview which lasted four hours, I had the right to suppose we should agree on all points, and thus conclude the first part of a pacification so ardently desired on both hemispheres. Our conferences were three per day, as I was impatient to achieve a result which would cause as much noise as the cannon we distinctly neard. Count VON BISMARCK assured me, as to the principle of armistice, that he desired as much as any of the neutrals to end hostilities, and that he desired to see established in France a Power which might contract lasting engagements. We were thus in accord on the essential points.

THE TIME ASKED.

I demanded from twenty-five to thirty days' armistice, as this time was needed for the votes and reunion of the elected candidates. BISMARCK did not contest this, and seemed to accept twenty-five days. As to the elections, BISMARCK assured me they should be free in the departments occupied by the Prussians. He made, however, a reservation concerning that portion of the territories of the French near the German frontiers and German in origin. I immediately answered that the armistice must not be delayed by the argument of questions which came within the province of a treaty of peace. BISMARCK said it was better not to discuss these questions, and that he, if not admitting the electoral agitation in said provinces, would not refuse that they be represented in the future National Assembly by a notable, free in opinion as other representatives.

THE POINT AS TO THE ARMIES.

After a pause we then arranged as to the conduct of the armies. BISMARCK referred this to the Generals and to the King, and this was the conclusion arrived at, namely: The belligerents were to stop where they were on the day of the signing of the armistice.

THE REVICTUALING POINT.

Lastly came the question of revictualing, and here again BISMARCK wished to consult military Commanders. So matters were deferred to the next day.

A CHANGE.

When on the 3d, I saw BISMARCK, he seemed uneasy and preoccupied, and asked if I had any news from Paris. I said no. He then said, Paris is in revolution, and a new government is proclaimed. I replied, if disorder for the moment has triumphed, the people's love of order and patriotism will soon restore order. I was forced, however, to suspend the negotiations, but soon received proof that I was not mistaken. I saw BISMARCK that night and resumed the negotiations on the subject of revictualing, and explaining the principle that, at the end of the armistice, each belligerent must be in the same condition as at the commencement. BISMARCK speaking in the name of the military leaders, pronounced against the revictualing, unless he received a military equivalent. I demanded what he meant. He answered: "A fort, perhaps more than one." I immediately stopped BISMARCK, saying, "Is it Paris you ask? Paris, our force, our hope, which you are not able to vanquish after fifty days' siege?" Arrived here we could go no farther.

I saw the military spirit all powerful in the Prussian's resolution against the peace policy, and asked BISMARCK for leave to see M. FAVRE and advise with him. BISMARCK charged me to declare that he would not interfere with the elections even if there was no armistice, and would let Paris communicate with Tours on the subject. The Government was informed of what had occurred, and they desired me to break off the negotiations on the refusal of the revictualing, and leave Versailles, which resolution I imparted to BISMARCK. The Powers must judge of the conduct of the belligerents and the efforts made to secure peace, which was not lost through the nation, but through the fault of the late Government, the existence of which was the fault of France in abandoning its destinies to such hands.

THE RUSSIAN COMPLICATION.

Compulsory Neutrality of the Euxine Intolerable to Russia—Extent of the Modification Demanded.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 14.—The Indépendance Belge of today says that while Russia has always felt that the neutrality of the Euxine was insupportable to her, she has never suggested a revision of the territorial arrangements of the treaty of 1856.

THE MODIFICATIONS DEMANDED.

VIENNA, Nov. 14.—The Freie Presse, of this city, today publishes the points of the recent Russian circular relative to the prohibition of frigates in the Black Sea. The note desires equal liberty of action to be accorded to the Sultan, and the remainder of the Paris treaty to remain valid.

THE SITUATION ABOUT ORLEANS.

Military Advantages Gained in the Recent Battles—A French General Allows 5,000 Germans to Slip Through His Fingers, and is Cashiered.

TOURS, Nov. 14—Evening.—The journals announce that the material benefits of the battle at Coulmiers are greater than it was at first supposed. Numbers of Germans are now found hiding themselves in the woods and out-buildings, where they took refuge. Also, several cannon were found that had been abandoned during the hasty retreat of the enemy. Many horses were taken. A French General, who neglected to surround the woods as ordered, thus allowing 5,000 Bavarians to escape, who were ready to surrender, was dismissed from the army. On the battle-field, numbers of Colonels were promoted to be Generals. On a superior German officer, who was captured, a map was found indicating the towns to be occupied. Neither Tours nor Blois was mentioned, but Vierzon, Bourges and others were named as strategical points. On the day of the battle, as prisoners were brought into Orleans, the Mayor issued a proclamation, inviting the citizens, in the name of humanity and civilization to treat the prisoners well.

A Battle Expected—The French Army Advancing—Bavarian Prisoners Sent South—Von der Tann's Report of His Losses—French Reinforcements.

TOURS, Nov. 14.—A battle is expected today at Toury. The Army of the Loire is advancing on that town from Orleans.

THE GERMAN PRISONERS.

The Bavarian prisoners recently brought here have been sent to L'Isle-en-Dodon, in the Department of Haute-Garonne, by special trains. [Haute-Garonne is one of the southernmost departments of France, its southern boundary being formed by Spain. The capital is Toulouse. L'Isle-en-Dodon is about twenty-five miles southwest of Toulouse.]

OFFICIAL REPORT OF GERMAN LOSSES.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 14.—Gen. VON DER TANN, in his official report to the head-quarters here, announces that in the battle before Orleans on the 9th, he lost 42 officers and 667 men killed and wounded. The French admit that their loss was 2,000.

THE MORAL EFFECT IN FRANCE.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The London Times correspondent, writing from Tours, says the moral effect of the victory near Orleans is incalculable. Reinforcements have gone forward to Gen. D'AURELLES DE PALADINES, who now has a large and effective force.

GAMBETTA SATISFIED.

M. GAMBETTA has returned to Tours from the army. He has expressed his entire satisfaction with affairs at and around Orleans.

THE ADVANCE ON LYONS.

Occupation of Two More Towns in the East by Germans—Garibaldi's Recent Head-quarters in the Hands of the Germans—He Retires or Advances to Chagny—The Lyonnais Preparing for Defense.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Prussians have captured the towns of L'Isle Sur le Doubs and Clerval in the Department of Doubs, after a brief skirmish. The Mobiles who were in possession of the towns retired to the southward. The Franc-Tireurs have entirely disappeared out of that section of the country. [L'Isle is situated on the right bank of the Doubs, about ten miles below and to the southwest of Montbéliard. It contains about 1,000 inhabitants. Clerval lies on the left bank of the Doubs, about ten miles below L'Isle, and about twenty-four miles above the north-east of Besançon.]

GERMAN OCCUPATION OF DOLE.

TOURS, Nov. 14.—Advices from Lyons show that the Prussians are advancing steadily in the East. They now occupy Dole.

GARIBALDI CHANGES HIS POSITION.

Gen. GARIBALDI is at Chagny, where there is also a French General with an effective force. It is supposed the two armies will join and resist the further advance of the enemy. [Dole, or Dolf, is situated on the right bank of the river Doubs, about twenty miles, in a direct line, from its confluence with the Soâne. It is a city of about 10,000 inhabitants, and has some importance as a manufacturing and trading town. It was, until recently, the head-quarters of Gen. GARIBALDI. Chagny is a town of the Department of the Soâne-et-Loir, containing about 4,000 inhabitants. It lies ten miles north-west of Chalons-sur-Soâne, on the Canal du Centre, and also on the railroad from Dijon to Lyons. Its position in relation to Dole is about thirty miles in a direct line, with the River Soâne lying between them. It is about nine miles south of Beaune, which was recently reported occupied by the Germans.]

FORTIFYING LYONS.

The work of fortifying Lyons continues. The heights about the town have been greatly strengthened. The National Guards are mainly employed in the work.

MOVEMENTS AT OTHER POINTS.

Thionville Fired by Prussian Shells—A German Advance on La Fere—Defense of Dunkirk by Inundation—Supplies of Paris.

ARLON, Belgium, Nov. 13.—Thionville has been bombarded by the Prussians. Fires had broken out there in consequence, and on Saturday the entire town seemed to be burning.

THE PRUSSIANS NEAR LA FERE.

TOURS, Nov. 14.—A dispatch from Lille announces that the Prussians are near La Fère. [This is a fortified town, about fifteen miles south of St. Quentin, in the Department of Aisne, situated on an island in the river Oise, near its confluence with the Sarre. It has about 4,000 inhabitants, and a considerable trade and manufacture in woolens and chemical products. It has also a large arsenal and school of artillery. It was taken by the Spaniards in 1536, and by the Prussians in 1814. A railroad from Paris to Rheims and other northern cities passes through La Fère.]

DEFENSE OF DUNKIRK.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 14.—The Belgian Government is negotiating with the authorities at Tours and Paris to prevent the inundation of the marsh lands around Dunkirk. The French military authorities had contemplated taking this step as a means of defense against the Prussians, but Dunkirk is so near the Belgian frontier that Belgium herself would be the greatest sufferer. It is thought the negotiations will be successful.

REPULSE OF PRUSSIANS AT EVREUX.

TOURS, Nov. 14.—An engagement occurred on Saturday, between the Guards Mobile and the enemy near Evreux. The French were successful, driving the enemy with loss. [Evreaux is about fifty-three miles W. N. W. of Paris, and contains about 9,000 inhabitants.]

PARIS AND ITS SUPPLIES.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The reports that Paris is distressingly short of provisions, are confirmed by dispatches from various quarters today.

FALL OF A TUNNEL.

One of the tunnels on the Strasbourg Railroad has fallen in, hopelessly interrupting communication by that line.

A NAVAL DUEL.

An Encounter Between a Prussian and a French Steamer Off Havana—They Leave Port to Fight—The German Victorious—A Spanish Man-of-War Acts as Second and De Rodas as Umpire.

HAVANA, Nov. 14.—On Monday, the 7th inst., the Prussian war steamer Meteor, carrying three guns, and the French war steamer Bouvet, carrying five, entered this harbor. The Meteor sailed out again after the French mail steamer Nouveau Monde had sailed, but the mail steamer immediately returned, fearing capture. On the night of Tuesday, the 8th, the Bouvet left port, but waited outside for the German war vessel. After the expiration of twenty-four hours, the time prescribed by law, the Meteor followed, a naval duel having been arranged between the officers before starting. The Spanish war steamer Hernando Cortes accompanied the two vessels. The Meteor had a crew of sixty men and the Bouvet eighty. The Bouvet was ten miles beyond the offing. Upon the coming out of the Meteor, she steamed inward toward the neutral line.

THE FIGHT.

The Bouvet opened the contest by firing five shots, which the Meteor promptly returned. The Bouvet then attempted to board the Meteor. In this she was unsuccessful. Her rigging became entangled, carrying away her main and mizzen masts. The rigging, falling with the masts, became entangled in the Meteor's screw. At the same moment the Meteor sent a shell into the inside of the Bouvet, smashing her steam-pipe. The Meteor, by reason of the disabling of her screw, became unmanageable, and the Bouvet, finding the quarters hot, and capture certain if she waited until the Meteor could disentangle herself, set sail rapidly, and made for port, the Meteor continuing to fire meanwhile. With a fair wind the Bouvet was enabled to cross into Spanish water before the Meteor could disentangle her screw. At this time the Hernando Cortes fired a gun, as a signal that the combat had closed. Both fought bravely.

THE KILLED AND WOUNDED.

The German gun-boat Meteor was accorded the victory. Both vessels are now in port repairing damages. The Meteor had three killed and one wounded. The Bouvet had only three wounded. The Germans in Havana are much elated with the affair which caused intense excitement.

FUNERAL OF THE PRUSSIAN DEAD.

The two Prussians, CARBONIER and THOMSEN, who were killed in the naval engagement, were buried here on the 10th inst., the German merchants attending the funeral in an immense body. It is now said the Bouvet left the scene of the fight under steam and sail. The German residents are arranging a grand banquet for the officers of the Meteor.

DE RODAS AS UMPIRE.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Nov. 14.—The steam-ship Cuba, from Havana, reports that a naval duel was fought off Havana between the French gun-boat Bouvet and the Prussian gun-boat Meteor. The Spanish war steamer Hernando Cortes, with the Captain-General of Cuba and other prominent officials, accompanied the Meteor. DE RODAS was the umpire. The fight lasted one hour, when the Bouvet withdrew. Both vessels were badly damaged. The Bouvet reports one killed and several wounded; the Meteor, three killed and one wounded. Another fight is expected. Both vessels returned to Havana.

An affray took place, yesterday, between two colored waiters employed at the Getty House, Yonkers, which came near proving of a very serious character to one of them. ANDREW ZEDEN and WM. JOHNSON had a dispute, which was followed by blows, when ZEDEN drew a razor out of his pocket, and with it inflicted a number of ugly-looking gashes on the face, neck and throat of JOHNSON, who finally escaped to the street and screamed for assistance, whereupon Officer KING arrested ZEDEN, and Justice BAIRD committed him without bail for trial.

Sale of Mr. Conner's Library.

The private library of Mr. CONNER was offered for sale, last night, by Messrs. LEAVITT, STREBBIGH & CO., in Astor-place. There was a fair attendance of buyers, but very little competition, as the books put up were not very fine nor very valuable, and as the auctioneers would not, or could not, furnish reporters with catalogues, the books, whose titles were snatched up from the lips of the auctioneer, cannot be properly described: The following are the prices of a few: DRYDEN'S Plays, two volumes, $1 25 per volume. "Letters of the Earl of Carnarvon," 30 cents. "Lives of Bronte and Brown," two volumes, 87½ cents each. "Epictetus," $1 37½. "Self-made Men," 35 cents. "British Travelers," $2 25. "Evelyn's Memoirs," two volumes, $1 50 each. "Everard's Memoirs," $1. "The Roman Republic," 35 cents. "Life and Works of Fielding," three volumes, $1 each. "Life of Christ," $3. FOORTE'S Works, three volumes, $1 12½ per volume. "Gardiner on Gout," 10 cents. "Gallery of British Portraits," $4 37½. "Life of David Garrick," two volumes, $3 12½ per volume, and GARRICK'S Private Correspondence, $4. "The French Day and French People," two volumes, 20 cents each, and a "Life of Franklin," in three volumes, $1 12½ each.

Twelfth and Nineteenth Ward Citizens' Association—Tammany Repeaters—The Harlem to City Hall Quick Transit Scheme.

A special meeting of the Twelfth and Nineteenth Ward Citizens' Association was held last evening at the Masonic Hall in Eighty-sixth-street, near Third-avenue. The meeting was called to order by JOHN FOLEY, the President, who occupied the chair. He referred to the recent election, at which he was defeated for member of Assembly, and said he was just as happy as though he had been elected. He stated that he had not been defeated by the people, but by the paid voters of Tammany Hall. He was satisfied with the result, however, for he was not running in the interest of a political party, but in the interest of the people. Before the election, Mr. HITCHMAN, the successful candidate, had promised to secure to the people of Harlem rapid transit to the City Hall, and now he should be kept to his promise. The objects for which the Association had been working so long were about to be effected. Mr. VANDERBILT had signified his consent, and soon the steam road would be an accomplished fact. It was proposed to run the road down Fourth-avenue to Thirty-second-street, the tracks to be sunk some ten feet below the surface of the street. From Thirty-second-street it would run down Fourth-avenue to Lafayette-place, through Marion-street to Centre-street, and thence to City Hall.

It was resolved that the Chair appoint a Committee of fifty, to wait on Mr. VANDERBILT on Thursday morning, to consult with him in reference to the project.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Death of John Cassaboom Not a Suicide—The Supposed Assassin—Ingenious Device for Concealing the Crime—Excitement in New-Jersey.

The supposed suicide of JOHN CASSABOOM, at Matumuskin Station, on the West Jersey Railroad, particulars of which were published in these columns a few days ago, turns out to be a case of mysterious and absorbing interest. Since the body was interred information has been given inducing the belief that a cold-blooded murder, instead of suicide, ended the life of the unfortunate man, and subsequent developments confirm these suspicions.

On Tuesday night last the engineer of a freight and passenger train on the West Jersey Railroad, discovered on the track, a short distance ahead of his train, which was then near Mantumuskin Station, a man lying motionless at full length across the track. The whistle was blown fiercely, the bell was rung, and an endeavor was made to stop the train. The man did not move, and before the train could be stopped, the locomotive and three of the cars had passed over his body. The mutilated corpse was extricated from underneath the cars, and was carried to Mantumuskin Station. The features were identified as those of JOHN CASSABOOM, a resident of the village. A hasty examination was made of the severed remains, but as it was generally supposed that the unfortunate man had committed suicide, no searching investigation was made, and, without an inquest, the body was interred. The examination of the pockets of the pantaloons and coat worn by the deceased showed, however, that he had no money, and this fact led afterward to the exhumation of the body. Mrs. CASSABOOM made the discovery two days after the interment of the body that her husband had carried away with him on the day when he was last seen over $45, and it was also learned that late in the afternoon of the day he had been seen near the swamp in company with a desperate character, named GARRISON. The body was then taken up and a surgical examination was made. This revealed the fact that murder had preceded the supposed suicide. Seven balls (buck-shot) were found lodged in and near the head. An exploration of the swamp near the spot on the railroad track where the body was run over, resulted in the discovery of a trail through the fallen leaves, and heavy footprints made by some person who was probably burdened with the lifeless body. GARRISON had disappeared, and although the footprints could not be identified in the soft ground and bedded leaves, as having been made by him, there were many circumstances to justify the belief that he is the murderer. His shot-gun, which had always been at hand in his house, is now missing, and the balls found in the body of CASSABOOM correspond in size with the shot used by him.

All day on Saturday and Sunday bands of farmers and villagers, generally armed, were searching the extensive swamp in which the murder was committed, with the hope of finding some trace of the murderer that would lead to the discovery of his present whereabouts. They had also a strong hope of coming upon the desperado himself, for at a farm-house near the east side of the swamp, one of the farm hands reported that he had seen a man answering GARRISON'S description walking along the edge of the wood on Friday forenoon. Yesterday the search was renewed, and it was said that the murderer's shot-gun had been found. The excitement is universal throughout the country for many miles surrounding, and if the murderer is still in the vicinity, there is little doubt that he will be apprehended. CASSABOOM'S body has been again buried. The Coroner's inquest will not probably be held until the close of the search for the assassin.

Central Dispensary—Second Annual Meeting.

The second annual meeting of the Central Dispensary was held last evening, at this institution, No. 394 Eighth-avenue. Mr. V. K. STEVENSON was elected Chairman, and Dr. S. A. RABORG requested to act as Secretary. The statistical reports of the house surgeon and visiting physician showed that 4,476 new patients had been treated in the Dispensary classes, 925 new patients attended at their homes by the visiting physicians, and 15,311 prescriptions dispensed during the year. The following gentlemen were elected to serve as officers, during the next twelve months: V. K. STEVENSON, President; B. P. Fairchild, First Vice-President; E. V. Parris, Second Vice-President; P. Kearney, Treasurer; S. A. Raborg, M. D., Secretary.

The gentlemen forming the medical staff of the institution were invited to retain their positions. The annual report shows that the treasury is not in a very plethoric condition, and at the same time the demands of the sick poor upon the institution have increased by at least one-third upon the number given for last year.

Last evening Palmyra Encampment No. 25, I. O. of O. F., was instituted at Odd-fellows' Hall, Hoboken. The ceremonies were performed by Grand Patriarch JOHN L. CORTELL, of Lambertville, assisted by a corps of officers from New-York and Jersey City. The event was celebrated by a supper, followed by numerous congratulatory speeches. During the evening twenty-four propositions for membership were received. The following are the officers installed: C. P., Justin Jones; H. P., James McCulloch; S. W., John Rienhardt; J. R. Goble; T., Wm. Kersee; J. W., Garrett D. Losier.

NAPOLEON AT WILHELMSHOEHE.

His Life in Exile—A Two-hours' Chat With a Times Correspondent—His Views on the Peace Question—No Treaty Possible on the Basis of a Cession of Territory—His Own Statement Regarding His Private Fortune.

From Our Own Correspondent

BRUSSELS, Monday, Oct. 31, 1870.

I have just returned here from a run of several weeks through Germany, during which I had interviews with several distinguished personages, among others the Queen of Prussia and the captive of Wilhelmshohe. My account of my visit to the former I include in another letter, as all that relates to the Ex-Emperor and the war naturally claims a priority.

THE INTERVIEW.

Having the advantage of being personally acquainted with His Majesty, I had no difficulty in obtaining admission to his presence. He received me with great cordiality, and on my expressing my gratification at seeing him looking so well, despite the rumors that had been circulated of his failing health, he laughed, and said that so far were they from being true, that he had not been a day ill since he had left Paris, the constant exposure to the open air, and daily exercise on horseback having produced a marked and permanent improvement in his health. As confirmation of this I may add that His Majesty walked with me for nearly two hours, through the grounds of the chateau, which are quite hilly, and in many parts broken. In addition to the extensive area of these grounds, he has a range of sixteen English miles distance from the chateau assigned him; but this is merely nominal, as he can pass the limits by a simple formality whenever it pleases him.

THE PEACE QUESTION.

In the course of the conversation which ensued during this walk, I mentioned to the Emperor the various reports which were in circulation concerning his views on the peace question. Regarding this, His Majesty said that he could not permit any doubt to exist. He considered it impossible for any Government to conclude a treaty of peace with Germany on the basis of a cession of territory and hope to maintain itself in France. A money indemnity and the raising of the fortresses coveted by Germany should not be allowed to stand in the way as obstacles to the conclusion of peace, but further than this the Provisional Government, and in fact no Government, could go. The Emperor even went so far as to say that he would prefer exile in Great Britain or the United States, on the most limited means, to accepting the restoration of his dynasty on such conditions as those sought to be imposed.

NAPOLEON'S PRIVATE FORTUNE.

I then alluded to the statements which had been published by his enemies regarding the amount of his private fortune, and the large sums which it was alleged he had invested in foreign securities. He answered me with animation, "that is a subject which touches me to the quick, because whatever may have been my errors and shortcomings as a ruler, I can truly say that I am not open to the charge of avarice or pecuniary interestedness. I will state to you unreservedly the nature and extent of my private resources, because I should like you to contradict all such reports. All that myself, wife and son actually possess are the former property of my mother at Arrerenberg, in Switzerland, and which costs more to maintain than it produces; the property left to the Prince Imperial by the Princess BACCHIOCHI, in Dalmatia, in consideration of the sums which I had paid for her out of my private fortune, and which is also unproductive; some property in Italy, which yields a trifling revenue, and a property in Spain, belonging to the Empress previous to her marriage, and which, having been improved, also yields some rental. Taken altogether, we possess just sufficient to enable us to live in the simplest bourgeois style. As to our having invested money in the foreign funds, or out of France, it is utterly false. Had I availed myself of the opportunities which presented themselves of investing money on the purchase of real estate and stocks in the United States, it would have, perhaps, been well for me and my family. I have known instances in which a moderate outlay in that way has been productive of large results from the enormous rise which has taken place in the value of property in the Atlantic cities.

NAPOLEON'S HOUSEHOLD.

I then laughably remarked to the Emperor that some of the English and all the French journals were incredulous as to his restricted means, and that they had pointed to his numerous household as evidence of its improbability. His Majesty scornfully replied: "Numerous household! Are they not then aware that the officers who form what is called my household are fellow-prisoners with me, and are supported by the Prussian Government? For my very servants, with two or three exceptions, I am indebted to the considerate kindness of the Queen. From the maitre d'hotel down to the humblest servant at the chateau, they are all selected from her Majesty's household, and were sent with her own plate and linen, with the expressed object of rendering my stay here as little uncomfortable as possible. I have even deprived myself of the services of most of my old and faithful attendants, with a view to keep my expenditure within my income."

REGARDING RESTORATION.

I then made some allusion to the hopes of restoration entertained by the partisans of the Empire, and to the intrigues attributed to them in London, Brussels and Jersey. His Majesty replied to me earnestly on this point, and expressed his regret that any of the influential men who had occupied positions under the Empire should involve themselves in proceedings of so unwise a character, at a time when it was the duty of every Frenchman to consider only the means of driving the invader from the soil of France. Circumstances alone and the will of the French people could bring about the results at which they aimed, and all efforts to anticipate them could only end in bringing discredit and ruin upon their authors. He hoped that all true friends of himself and his family would bear this truth in mind.

IMPERIAL GRATITUDE.

The Emperor expressed himself in grateful terms, in regard to the kindness exhibited toward the Empress and his son, by people of all ranks in England, and evidently comprehended that the industrial classes in that country fully appreciated the advantages which they had derived from the liberal commercial policy inaugurated under his reign.

THE FALL OF METZ.

On asking him how long he thought it would take to insure the fall of Metz, he appeared to be under the impression that it had provisions enough to enable it to hold out for a considerable time. This comprised nearly all that transpired of public interest, in the interview which I had with His Majesty. In regard to the reported unwholesomeness of Wilhemshoehe, he did not appear to have any apprehension of that kind. He described it as a very agreeable residence, and he had no doubt that it could be rendered warm and comfortable during the Winter.

HIS MAJESTY'S HABITS.

As regards His Majesty's habits of life at the chateau, a few particulars may not be uninteresting. He rises regularly at 6, and after shaving himself and dressing, goes to his cabinet de travail about 7½. At 8 a cup of tea and a slice of bread are brought to him, after which he reads the German, French and English papers, remaining alone generally up to 9 o'clock, following his old habits at the Tuilleries. At 9 his private Secretary PIETRIE arrives, and remains with him until 10. His Majesty then walks in the grounds of the chateau until 11, when he returns to partake of a second dejeuner, at which he remains only a quarter of an hour. The dishes are so simple that his officers make it a subject of complaint. The party then retire into an adjoining parlor, where smoking and conversation are unrestrictedly indulged in, His Majesty smoking his favorite cigarette, but usually talking very little. The Emperor then returns to his cabinet to occupy himself with his correspondence or receive persons of his household on private business. He remains there until half past three or four o'clock, when he either drives, rides or walks out, always preferring the latter exercise when the weather permits. When he drives out he most frequently uses the caleche and horses sent him by the Queen of Prussia. He returns in time to dress for dinner, which is usually served at 6½ o'clock, the Emperor being always attired en bourgeois, while the French officers residing in the chateau, always appear in uniform and with their decorations. The dinner usually consists of a mixture of French and German dishes, but is, on the whole, very simple, according to the Emperor's taste. After remaining at table about half an hour, His Majesty and his household usually retire to a parlor, when coffee and cigars are served. After a short time passed in conversation the Emperor occasionally sits down to a game of cards with some of his officers, but much more frequently plays at patience, a game of which he is extremely fond. After an hour passed in this way, he generally calls upon one of his suite to read, and a popular novel is not unfrequently the work selected. One evening the first volume of the Mousquetaires de la Reine had been got through, and the Emperor was greatly disappointed to learn that the succeeding one could not be found. "Quel dommage," he said, "comme c'est bien ecrit. Comme un ouvrage comme cela demande du talent et du pouvoir de combinaison." His Majesty usually retires to his apartment at an early hour, as he is an early riser. The officers composing His Majesty's household are Gens. CASTELNAU REILLE, Prince DE LA MOSKOWA, Count PAJOL and VAUBERT; two officers of ordinance, LAURISTON and HEPP; two ecuyers, RAIMBAUD and DAVILLIERS, and two physicians, Drs. CORVISART and CONNEAU, the latter of whom, however, is frequently absent.

AN IMPERIAL BROCHURE.

I must not close this letter without adding that the Emperor's brochure, entitled "La Campagne de 1870," is to be published here the day after to-morrow. R.

THE HOPES OF PEACE.

Lord Granville to the English Ambassador to Prussia—What England Has Done Toward Ending the War—Count Bismarck's Reply.

The North-German Gazette of Nov. 1 contains a translation of the most material portion of a dispatch addressed by Lord GRANVILLE on the 20th ult. to Lord AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, the British Ambassador at Berlin. It will, of course, be understood that in re-translating this into English the substance and not the phraseology of the original document is given. The dispatch begins by reviewing the exertions made by the English Government, which first did its utmost to prevent the war altogether, next to limit its extent, and, more recently, to effect an interview between Count BISMARCK and M. JULES FAVRE, which, however, only showed the disparity of their views as to a basis for negotiations. Adverting to Count BISMARCK'S circular of the 11th of October, with reference to the probable death from starvation of h vice of the train was interrupted in order to make his traveling more rapid. At Chateau Thierry, a carriage with the armorial bearings of the King of Prussia was in waiting to take him to Versailles. As soon as he arrived the General was received by Count BISMARCK, who forwarded to the King a demand for an audience. He was at once introduced, and found himself in the presence of a council of war, at which the principal chiefs of the Prussian Army were sitting, under the presidency of the King. Gen. BOYER having stated the object of his mission, Gen. MOLTKE spoke and declared that in a matter purely military negotiations could not be long. The army of Metz was to submit to the same fate as the army of Sedan, and surrender as prisoners of war. Count BISMARCK observed that the political view of the matter must take the lead over the military view. 'I should be inclined,' he continued, 'to admit of a convention which would allow the army of Metz to withdraw to an appointed place on the French territory, in order to protect there all deliberations necessary to secure peace.' This idea was suggested to M. DE BISMARCK by the difficulties which arose from the Prussian Government itself, from the absence of all government in France. Indeed, the information gathered by the General on his way, from station-masters and various persons, as well as the newspapers which he has been able to bring here, unfortunately leave no room for doubt on that point. The most complete anarchy at present prevails in France. Paris invested, starved, and deprived of external communications, must open her gates to the Prussians within a few days; civil discord paralyzes her defense; the members of the Committee of National Defense have been overpowered. GAMBETTA and KERATRY have gone away by balloon—the one fell at Amiens, the other at Bar-le-Duc. Disorder is at its utmost pitch in the south of France. The red flag is floating at Lyons, Marseilles and Bordeaux. An army of Breton volunteers has been destroyed near Orleans. Normandy, overrun by bands of brigands, has called on the Prussians to re-establish order. Havre, Elbant, Rouen are now garrisoned by Prussians, who co-operate with the National Guard for the preservation of public security. A movement of a religious character has been started in La Vendée. The north is ardently wishing for peace. Prussia claims Lorraine and Alsace and several thousand millions of francs as a war indemnity; Italy claims Savoy, Nice and Corsica. The Provisional Government being dispersed, the various towns not agreeing as to the form of a new Government, and the Orleans Princes not having presented themselves, this anarchy is the cause of unforeseen difficulty for the Prussian Government, which is inclined to wait for peace. They cannot think of laying down the bases for negotiations unless they address themselves to the de facto Government which existed before the 1st of September, namely, the Regency. It is not yet known whether, under present circumstances, the Regency will consent to listen to proposals for peace; but, in case of a refusal, the Chamber of Deputies, elected by universal suffrage, and which still legally represents the nation, can alone be invoked. However, in order that the Corps Legislatif, which continued its sittings up to the 1st of September, can reassemble for deliberation, it must be protected by a French army. Such is the part which the army of Metz will undoubtedly have to fulfill."

After this speech, which was listened to amid profound silence, the assembly of officers was declared closed. Gen. BOYER, in his letter to the Indépendance Belge, says: "More moderate than M. GAMBETTA, I will confine myself to a protest against his unqualified violence, which in the name of the whole army of the Rhine, from which I received the mission which took me to Versailles and London, and in the name of its glorious leader, I declare that M. GAMBETTA offends the public conscience, as much as our brave soldiers, in speaking of infamy and rascalities. We did not capitulate with honor or with duty, we capitulated with hunger."

BELEAGUERED PARIS.

An Exodus of Englishmen Deferred.

Paris (Oct. 27) Correspondence London Daily News.

At an early hour yesterday morning, about 100 English congregated at the gate of Charenton en route for London. There were with them about sixty Americans and twenty Russians, who also were going to leave us. Imagine the indignation of these "Cives Romani," when they were informed that, while the Russians and the Americans would be allowed to pass the Prussian outposts, owing to the list of the English wishing to go not having reached Count BISMARCK in time, they would have to put off their journey to another day. The guard had literally to be turned out to prevent them from endeavoring to force their way through the whole German army. I spoke, this morning, to an English butler who had made one of the party. This worthy man evidently was of opinion that the end of the world is near at hand, when a butler and a most respectable person is treated in this manner. "Pray, Sir, may I ask," he said, with bitter scorn, "whether Her Majesty is still on the throne in England?" I replied, "I believed that she was." "Then," he went on, "as this Count BISMARCK, Ass they call him, driven the British nobles out of the 'ouse of Lords? nothing which this feller does would surprise me now." BUTLER, Chargé d'Affaires, and the other cives, are, I understand, to make another start as soon as the "feller" condescends to answer a letter which has been forwarded to him, asking him to fix a day for their departure.

ITALY AND ROME.

Diplomats' Circular in Relation to the Occupation of the Papal Dominions.

The Italian Government has addressed the following circular to its diplomatic agents, with regard to the occupation of the Roman States:

FLORENCE, Oct. 18.

SIR: The inhabitants of the Roman Provinces, having acquired the liberty of giving solemn expression to their will, have declared, almost unanimously, in favor of the annexation of Rome and its territory to the constitutional monarchy of VICTOR EMMANUEL II. and his descendants. This vote, completed with all the safeguards of sincerity and publicity, is the last consecration of Italian unity. It is in the midst of the manifestations of joy of the whole nation that the King has accepted the plebiscite of the Romans, and that he has been able to declare that the work commenced by his illustrious father and continued by himself with so much perseverance and glory is at last accomplished.

For the first time in the course of many centuries the Italians again find in Rome the traditional centre of their nationality. Rome henceforth is united to Italy by the national right, which, expressed at first by the Parliament, has found in the vote of the Romans its final sanction. This is a great fact, of which the consequences we were the first to recognize extend far beyond the frontiers of the Peninsula, and will contribute efficaciously to the progress of the Catholic population. In going to Rome, Italy encounters one of the greatest questions of modern times. It is to reconcile the national and religious sentiment, while protecting the independence of the spiritual authority of the Holy See in the midst of the freedom inherent in modern society.

Thus you will have seen by the reply of the King to the Roman deputation that Italy feels all the grandeur and responsibility which she assumes in declaring that the temporal power of the Holy Father has ceased to exist. We accept this responsibility with courage, for we are sure to bring to the solution of the problem an impartial spirit, filled with the most sincere respect for the religious sentiments of the Catholic population. To apply the idea of right in its widest and highest acceptation to the relations of the Church to the State is the task which Italy has undertaken.

The temporal power of the Holy See was the last relic of the institutions of the Middle Ages. At a period in which the ideas of sovereignty and property were not clearly separated, in which moral force had no efficacious sanction in public opinion, the confusion of the two powers might not have been without utility. But in our times it is not necessary to possess a territory and to have subjects to exercise a great moral authority. A political sovereignty which rests not on the consent of the populations, and cannot be transformed according to social exigencies, can no longer exist. Compulsion as to matters of faith, rejected by all modern States, found in the temporal power its last asylum. Henceforth, every appeal to the secular sword will be suppressed at Rome, and the Church will profit in its turn by freedom. Freed from the embarrassments and the transitory necessities of politics, the religious authority will find in the respectful adhesion of the consciences of men its true sovereignty.

Our first duty, therefore, in making Rome the capital of Italy is to declare that the Catholic world will not be menaced in its beliefs by the effect of the completion of our unity. To begin with, the high dignity which belongs personally to the Holy Father will not be at all trenched upon. His character of Sovereign, his pre-eminence over the other Catholic Princes, the immunities and civil list which appertain to him in that capacity, will be amply guaranteed to him. His palaces and residences will have the privilege of being extra-territorial. The exercise of his high spiritual mission will be secured to him by a double kind of guarantee, by free and uninterrupted communication with the faithful, by the Nuncios whom he will continue to accredit to the Powers, by the representatives which the Powers will continue to send to him; in short, and above all, by the separation of Church and State which Italy has already proclaimed, and which the King's Government proposes to apply to its territory as soon as Parliament has sanctioned the projects of the advisers of the Crown. In order to reassure the faithful as to our intentions and convince them that it would be impossible for us to exercise a pressure on the decisions of the Holy See, and to try and make religion a political instrument, nothing seems to us more efficacious than the entire liberty which we accord to the Church in our territory. We do not disguise from ourselves that at first civil society would have to surmount many obstacles and difficulties. But we have faith in liberty; it will moderate and prevent all excesses, it will be a sufficient corrective against fanaticism. The only power which we desire to invoke at Rome, whose traditions are so imposing, is the power of right; that the religious sentiment may assume a new impulse in a society where none of the guarantees of political liberty are wanting in order to inspire not of fear, but of satisfaction; for religion and liberty are the two most powerful elements in social amelioration.

We entertain a firm hope that the moment will come when the Holy Father will appreciate the immense advantages of the liberty which we offer to the Church, and when he will cease to regret a power all the advantages of which remain to him, while he only loses its embarrassments and dangerous responsibility. Meanwhile, you can, Sir, assure the Government to which you are accredited, that the Holy Father, who had the good idea of not removing from the Vatican, is regarded by the royal authorities and by the population with the most respectful consideration. On the day when the Pope, yielding to the promptings of his heart, remembers that the flag which now floats over Rome is that which he blessed in the first days of his Pontificate amid the enthusiastic acclamations of Europe; on the day when conciliation between Church and State is proclaimed at the Vatican, the Catholic world will admit that Italy has not made a sterile work of demolition by going to Rome, and that the principle of authority will be replaced in the Eternal City on the wide and solid basis of civil and religious liberty.

ILLINOIS.

Result of the Late Election—Divisions and Side Issues—Effect of the Prohibition Movement—The Congressional Delegation—Composition of the State Legislature—Extent of Republican Losses.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Nov. 10, 1870.

The election has passed off, and the general results have been received. There was comparatively little interest felt, or else there was so much dissatisfaction with the way in which things were managed, that large numbers staid away from the polls. There was apparently great indifference about the returns. They never came in so slowly or so imperfectly before since the days of telegraphs and railroads, and they were so conflicting for the first two days that there was great difficulty in arriving at results, one dispatch contradicting its immediate predecessor.

THE CONTEST IN CHICAGO.

In this city and Congressional district we had a mixed fight, both parties being divided and split up. The nomination of Mr. FARWELL ought never to have been made; but being made, the Republicans generally felt bound to support him. Mr. WENTWORTH was first nominated by the working men, and then came out on his own hook, backed by the Tribune on Free-trade principles, and by the Times, in the hope of defeating the Republican candidate. About half of the Democratic Party are bitterly opposed to the Times, and so the fight was interesting. The Irish voted by clans, each neighborhood or ward having a "bell-wether" to lead them. These leaders once secured, the main body of the Irish vote is safe. Mr. FARWELL had the means to secure the leaders, and used them, and received probably more Democratic votes than Mr. WENTWORTH did Republican, and so is elected by 5,500 majority, on a poll of about two-thirds of the votes of the district. The entire Republican Legislative ticket is elected—three Senators and twenty-two Representatives. Two of the Senators are able and good men; the third is a politician of the money-grabbing order, though of some ability. To the "Lower House" we send a mob of twenty-two very ordinary men—as much so as if drawn from a jury-box. The majority, individually, are well enough; but there is not one for whom a good reason can be given why he should be sent to the Legislature, at this time especially. The entire Republican county ticket is elected, and a large majority of the Aldermen and other city officers.

OTHER CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

In the Second District Mr. FARNSWORTH does not go in by fifteen thousand majority, as he did two years ago, but is probably elected only by a plurality. Mr. STOUGHTON, his principal opponent, was the Prohibition candidate, and had to make the canvass alone, without the aid of an organization in any of the counties. The large vote which he received shows the extent of the disaffection in the district. There is no doubt that if the Opposition had had county and township organizations, Mr. FARNSWORTH would have been defeated. In the third and sixth the battle was easily won. In the fifth Mr. INGERSOLL is defeated—a result not wholly unexpected. There was general dissatisfaction throughout the district, and the running of Dr. [illegible]es, the Prohibition candidate, assured the result. Mr. INGERSOLL forced himself upon the district once too often—relying upon the seven thousand majority of 1868 to insure his election. Three terms is as long as the people care to send a man to Congress in the West—and more especially when whisky rings and whisky frauds are in fashion, as they have been in Peoria. In the Eighth District, the fight to force CULLOM on the people displeased a great many; but probably Col. MERRIAM would still have been elected but for the running of Mr. MINIER, the Prohibition candidate. Beside, Col. MERRIAM was not popular, and scarcely a fit man for the place. In the Fourth District the run was close, not, so far as I can learn, from any special dissatisfaction with Gen. HAWLEY, but Adams County gave an unexpectedly large majority, and Col. CABLE ran well in his own county, Rock Island, and there was a light vote in Mercer, Warren and Henderson.

The Seventh District is also close, and the latest dispatches received here defeat MOORE, Republican, by a small majority. Division and disaffection have been at work in this district. This, I believe, is MOORE's third race—one more than Western usage allows. With the lights now before us, the prospect is that the Illinois delegation will be divided—seven and seven—the Democrats carrying the Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Thirteenth Districts—the Fourth and Seventh somewhat in doubt yet.

COMPOSITION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The Republicans will doubtless have a good working majority in the Legislature. According to present indications, the Senate will stand thirty to twenty—seven Republicans and three Democrats holding over. The House will be about ninety-seven to eighty. Cook County, with its increased representation from seven to twenty-two, saves the Republicans in this branch, as the losses elsewhere are considerable. In the La Salle Senatorial district the Prohibitionists nominated REDDICK, who was afterward taken up by the Democrats and elected by 1,200 majority. In La Salle County the Prohibitionists ran an assembly ticket, and the usual Republican majority of 800 to 1,200 is wiped out, and four Democrats are elected.

REPUBLICAN LOSSES.

On the whole, the result of the election is not a promising one for the Republicans. They lose three members of Congress, and several of their strong counties. Their gains do not compensate for their losses.

The Daring Express Robbery on the Pacific Railroad.

From the Sacramento Bee, Nov. 5.

One of the most startling robberies that has ever been committed on this coast or elsewhere, occurred about midnight last night in the heart of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, by a gang of ruffians who boarded the regular express and passenger train going eastward, took possession of it, and robbed the express-car of its treasure. About this time last year a similar outrage was committed on one of the Western railroads—we think it was in Ohio—when a train was stopped by a party of highwaymen and robbed on an open prairie. But this was done at midnight, and so well were the plans laid and carried out that the particulars will carry astonishment with them everywhere. It appears that as the eastward-bound express and passenger train was leaving Verdi, about 12½ o'clock, five masked and disguised men jumped on the rear end of the express-car, and after kicking a brakeman off, drove MARSHALL, the conductor, back into the baggage-car, with drawn pistols. At the same time two other men jumped on the engine and leveled revolvers at the engineer's head, telling him if he made the least noise or did not go just as they wished, they would blow his brains out. The men on the express-car drew the linch-pin and dropped the cars following. The engine was stopped five miles to the east of Verdi, where three or four men were in waiting, with guns, crowbars and other kind of tools for breaking open the treasure-boxes. At that place they also had rails piled on the track, so as to make sure of stopping the locomotive, as though fearful that those having possession of the booty would go past and leave them nowhere in the prize. They took the express messenger and locked him in the mail-car, and then "went through" the express-car. Each thought that they got a good deal over a thousand dollars for the express, and recalling the engineer to the express-car, they uncoupled the engine from them and ran further east, where they crossed the river and struck out in the direction of Washoe and Virginia City. They had cut the telegraph wires in two places between Verdi and Reno, rendering it impossible to get dispatches eastward to any point from whence aid might be procured. The robbers were all dressed in linen dusters, and wore black masks over their faces, so that it was impossible to identify any of them, although perhaps known to some of the men on the train. Later accounts from the scene of the robbery state that it is the general belief that the accomplices are now in or about Sierra Valley, and it is thought that at least some of them will soon be captured. WELLS, FARGO & CO. have offered a reward of $10,000—one-half for the recovery of the money, and the other $5,000 for the apprehension and conviction of the robbers. A reward should be offered for the arrest of any one of them, as it may prove a very difficult matter to capture them all. This affair has struck every body with amazement, so bold, decisive, well-planned, and successful has it proved.

ELECTION NOTES.

The official count shows that a Republican has been elected to the Illinois Legislature from Jo Daviess County by one majority.

The Boards of Supervisors meet today in all the counties, to canvass the vote in the election.

A Boston paper asserts that WENDELL PHILLIPS did not vote at the late election. For the candidate of two parties for Governor this is a bad showing.

The Boston Commonwealth says the two old women, who distributed ballots in one of the wards in that city, on Tuesday, did it modestly and effectively, and that their presence was pleasing to the politicians generally.

Complete official returns from the Fifth congressional District of Kentucky, give JAMES SPEED, Republican, 4,782, and BOYD WINCHESTER, Democrat, 7,152. The district includes Louisville.

The Albany Argus concedes the election of Mr. WADE, Republican, to the Assembly, from Fulton and Hamilton County, and says that in all probability the Assembly will stand a tie,—64 Republicans and 64 Democrats.

The Brooklyn Eagle expects that the Democrats will be able to organize the Assembly by Democratic votes alone, and it announces that the Kings County Democracy will present the name of JOHN C. JACOBS for Speaker.

The total Democratic vote in Maryland is 76,710, and the Republican 57,752; Democratic majority, 18,958. For President the State gave GRANT 30,488, SEYMOUR 63,327; Democratic majority, 31,919; Republican gain, 11,961.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives in Missouri was defeated in the recent election, and the St. Louis Democrat says the cause of it was the hostility of his German constituents to his somewhat prominent advocacy of female suffrage.

The St. Louis Democrat counts up in the Missouri House of Representatives, sixty-two Democrats, thirty-two regular Republicans and forty-two liberal Republicans. In the Senate, fifteen Democrats, five regular Republicans and fourteen liberals.

When the result of the election was announced in Lancaster, Garrard County, Ky., the Republicans began cheering, which so incensed some of the Democrats, that they made an attack upon them. Result—six Democrats wounded, one mortally.

A Tennessee paper declares that one of the Democratic Congressmen elected from that State "wouldn't pass for a first-class idiot." This is good news. No true patriot could wish that any member of Congress, whatever his politics, should pass for a first-class idiot.

The Baltimore American says that at the election in Maryland the colored voters stood by their principles manfully throughout the State, neither threats nor bribes inducing them to sell their suffrages, or waver in their allegiance to the maintenance of the doctrine of "equal rights to all men."

The majority for JAMES H. PLATT, Republican, in the Second Congressional District of Virginia, is about 4,700. The result in the First District is not definitely ascertained. Incomplete returns (thirteen counties to be heard from) give CRITCHER, Democrat, 2,831; NORTON, colored Republican, 2,542; DOUGLAS, white Republican, 1,557.

The Knoxville Chronicle says that Hon. WILLIAM H. WISENER made a better canvass for Governor of Tennessee than his most sanguine friends expected; that he took the race against greater odds than any man in the State ever took a race, and in the face of every obstacle entered the canvass, and succeeded in bringing the Democratic majority far below what they anticipated.

The Nashville Banner reports that THOS. H. REEVES, of Jonesboro, ran against JOHN B. RODGERS, Republican, for Congressman for the State at large from Tennessee, upon the strength of a resolution adopted by the State Legislature, March 12, 1868, and which has never been repealed, providing for the election of such a member. Under this resolution, Gen. RODGERS was elected to Congress in 1868, but was refused admission.

The Massachusetts labor reformers threw overboard their first candidate for Lieutenant-Governor because he had accepted the Democratic nomination, and put Judge HENRY W. BISHOP in his place. But Judge BISHOP, who is a Democrat, was the regular Democratic candidate for Councilor in the Eighth District, and the labor reformers actually had a candidate for that office in the field against him! They voted for him for Lieutenant-Governor and ex-officio President of the Council, but would not vote for him to be a member of that Council.

Hon. JOHN F. DRIGGS has published a card in Michigan papers, thanking "those true friends all over the Sixth Congressional District, who have remained firm to their principles and unshaken in their confidence in his integrity." He also informs them and all other persons, that neither the means employed nor the result obtained can possibly modify or change his attachment to the Republican Party so long as it shall be true to the interests of the country and to the principles of liberty and justice upon which it was founded.

The Mysterious Death of Chancellor Lansing.

(From an article by Mr. Thurlow Weed in the Galaxy for December.)

The following letter, though written several months ago, as seen by its date, I only now send for publication:

NEW-YORK CITY, Feb. 18, 1870.

To the Editor of the Galaxy:

Since our conversation the other morning, in which you assumed that an article in the NEW-YORK TIMES, some months since, relating to the mysterious fate of the late CHANCELLOR LANSING, of Albany, referred to myself, as possessing information that the public might look for at no distant day, I have concluded to submit what I have to say on that subject, with your permission, through the pages of the Galaxy.

Twenty-three years ago an eminent citizen of this State, now deceased, put me in possession of information which in his judgment clearly demonstrated that CHANCELLOR LANSING was murdered through the agency of parties whom he named, asking and receiving my promise to publish the facts, should I survive the parties implicated—parties who lived useful lives and died leaving unblemished reputations.

By a strict or literal construction of my promise, the contingency on which it was based has occurred. My distinguished informant and the persons whom his proofs implicated have gone to their final account. As the time, therefore, had arrived when it became necessary to act upon this question, I found it surrounded by great difficulties. The facts and circumstances, if given to the public, would reach further, as I believe, in their consequences than my informant contemplated—certainly further than I was myself aware when I gave him my promise. While it is true that the parties named are beyond the reach of human tribunals, as of public opinion, yet others, immediately associated with them and sharing in the strong inducement which prompted the alleged crime, survive, occupying high position and enjoying public confidence. To these persons, should my proofs be submitted, public attention would be irresistibly drawn. This fact, independent of the circumstance that a large circle of immediate descendants of the deceased persons more directly accused would suffer, led me not only to pause, but to seek advice. Several months ago submitted the question to two enlightened, experienced and calm-minded professional gentlemen, Hon. HUGH MAXWELL and RICHARD M. BLATCHFORD, Esq., on whose judgment and friendship I knew that I could safely repose. Mr. MAXWELL, after weighing all the facts and circumstances maturely, stated that they might and probably would produce such a moral conviction in the minds of those who read the [illegible] conviction; yet that if the accused parties had [illegible] upon their trial the testimony would have been insufficient to satisfy a Court or jury. In his judgment, therefore, in a case which would occasion so much anguish among the families and friends of those who were not here to defend themselves, and where the ends of justice could in no sense be promoted, he could see no useful or wise purpose to be accomplished by the publication. Mr. BLATCHFORD, having carefully considered the whole question, came to the conclusion that if my informant were now living to look the question in all its bearings in the face, he would promptly absolve me from my promise. Nor is this all. I was fortunate in meeting, a few weeks since, the widow of my friend and informant, a lady of high intelligence, cultivation and good sense. This lady, who enjoyed to the fullest extent the confidence of her distinguished husband, had been informed by him of the trust he had reposed in me. She was prepared, therefore, to speak understandingly on the subject; and while she could not bring herself to advise me to disregard the injunction of one whose views, suggestions and wishes had been the law of her life, she evidently hoped that I would see my way clear to withhold the statement, and was as evidently gratified to learn that Mr. MAXWELL and Mr. BLATCHFORD had advised me to suppress it.

If I needed other evidence of the propriety of the course I have concluded to adopt, it would be found, I think, in the recent indelicate experience of a distinguished literary personage, who, under circumstances somewhat similar, felt called upon to reveal what had been communicated to her affecting the reputations of eminent persons long since deceased. In the remarkable unanimity of disapproval which that revelation encountered, there is a lesson and a moral too significant to be disregarded.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

A Train Precipitated into a Swamp in South Carolina—Five Persons Instantly Killed.

From the Charleston News, Nov. 12.

One of the most destructive railroad accidents that ever occurred in our State, happened on the Greenville and Columbia Railroad, on Thursday afternoon, at 4 o'clock. The down passenger train, a little behind schedule time, was passing over the trestle across Cedar Creek, about twelve miles from Columbia, when the trestle gave way, precipitating the baggage-car and those cars occupied by passengers into the swamp below, a distance of twenty-five feet. The locomotive and tender passed over before the trestle gave way, and the last car of the train, a new and unoccupied coach, stopped at the verge of the gap. The car thrown into the swamp were the baggage-car, one second-class passenger-car, and two first-class passenger-cars. The cars were instantly demolished, and of the unfortunate passengers five were instantly killed, three mortally wounded, four severely injured, and others more or less bruised, only a few escaping unhurt.

Mr. A. J. HALTIWANGER, well known in this city, was one of this number, and he, with two others, set out immediately from Columbia to obtain assistance. As soon as the dreadful news reached Columbia, President BUSH and Superintendent MORE went with a special train to the scene of disaster. They reached there about 9 o'clock, and returned with the passengers who needed attention about 12 o'clock at night, and it was then ascertained that the following were the names of the killed and wounded:

Fatally injured—STEPHEN SMITH, of Newberry; HUTSON LOMAX, colored Senator from Abbeville, since dead.

Seriously injured—A. BARNES, of Columbia, express messenger; Conductor G. E. ISAACS, Col. JAMES HAGOOD, Miss M. JOY, of Newberry; Major LLOYD HILL.

Col. HAGOOD is a brother of Gen. JOHNSON HAGOOD. His skull was fractured, and, though still living at last accounts, he was in a critical condition.

The body of Mrs. FOGARTY was brought down to Charleston for interment.

The only car which remained upon the track was a splendid new coach which cost $5,500, and which was unoccupied. The engine passed safely over the trestle, but was thrown from the track by the displacement of a rail, and was considerably damaged. The loss to the road will probably amount to $20,000. One of the coaches which was destroyed was a companion to that which escaped injury, and cost a similar sum.

This accident is only paralleled in this State by that which happened some twenty years ago on the Charlotte Railroad, about twelve miles from Columbia, which was caused by a train running off a trestle into Elkin's mill-pond.

Further Particulars—Condition of the Wounded.

From the Columbia (S. C.) Phœnix, Nov. 12.

The wounded individuals are doing as well as could be expected. Mr. ISAACS' wounds are severe, but are not considered dangerous. Senator LOMAX and Mr. SMITH are still alive, but little hopes are expressed of their recovery. Col. HAGOOD is still alive. His head was terribly crushed. JOHN R. TRAPP, a mail agent, (recently employed in the Post-office,) had his leg amputated yesterday. Mr. BARNES is improving. His face was badly cut. Further investigation into the cause of the accident shows that one wheel of the express-car broke—thus throwing the car off the track—the trestle gave way and the other cars fell through. The trains are running as usual—passengers being transferred at the break. JAMES A. HOYT, Esq., of Anderson—who was on board the unfortunate train—gives the following information:

The accident occurred at Cedar Creek trestle, in 200 yards of the bridge over Cedar Creek, at 3½ o'clock P. M. The engine passed over safely, and when the weight of the entire train was upon the trestle, that structure gave way, and precipitated the baggage-car, second-class passenger-car, and the foremost passenger-coach into the chasm. The second passenger-coach, occupied chiefly by ladies and their attendants, was perforce thrown into the wreck, and those in the front part of it were buried beneath the rubbish. The sufferers by the accident were mostly in the second-class car and the foremost passenger car, although four or persons were injured in the ladies' coach.

The engineer had slacked up to cross over the bridge, and was just beginning to increase the rate of speed when the crash came. But for this fact, the loss of life and limb would have been fearfully increased, as the train had been running at fifteen miles an hour, and was behind time. In less time than it takes to record it, there was a scene of indescribable suffering and agony. Anxious, inquiring faces among the fortunate, and shrieks for help among the wounded, revealed a terrible scene. Those who escaped injury were at once rescued from the débris, and the work began of extricating the dead and wounded. The men were cool, and calm in the discharge of their duty, and the women behaved nobly. Every assistance was almost instantly rendered to the sufferers, and all united in the utmost exertions to alleviate the pangs of the maimed and dying.

Dr. O. B. MAYOR, of Newberry, was the only physician on board, and actively engaged his services for the relief of those most in need. He was without means, however, as there was no remedial appliances at hand, and there was no dwelling in the immediate neighborhood.

The accident might have occurred at any time, as the trestle was proportionately dangerous, according to the judgment of well-informed persons whose attention had been previously called to it. The train could not have been as heavy as many freight trains passing almost daily, about 120 persons were on board the train, and it is miraculous that so few were wounded or killed. None realized the danger until all was over, and there never was such a fearful scene perhaps in which the participants acted so deliberately and with such apparent presence of mind. The chasm was not over twenty feet deep, nor more than forty feet wide, and into this space was ushered a mass of human beings, covered by the falling timbers and particles of the breaking cars.

Messengers were dispatched to Columbia at once, and walked the entire distance, about twelve miles. A train went to the relief of the sufferers, as stated yesterday, as soon as it could be got ready, and at 11 o'clock the welcome sound of the whistle announced the news to the eager watchers that relief was at hand.

Letter from a Reprieved Murderer.

The Syracuse Journal publishes the following letter written by the murderer CARY, after receiving the information of the commutation of his sentence:

ONONDAGA PENITENTIARY, NOV. 11, 1870.

DEAR MOTHER: I have had good news this morning. Mother, I am going to State Prison for life! Oh, am't I glad of this! I know it is a hard word to say—I'm glad to go to State Prison for life. But think of the gallows two weeks from today! Oh, mother, God has done this for me; I asked Him to spare me another year, and He has! Mother, when you get in trouble ask God to help you and He will, as He did me. Oh, how can I thank Him for that! His loving kindness, oh, how good! Mother, when I am in State Prison, you will sometimes come and see me—won't you, mother! Mother, don't forget God. Thank Him for what He has done for me. I shall not forget Him. He is my friend forever—in this world and the next. Mother, God has saved your son from the gallows. I may never see you again after I leave this place. If not, we may meet in Heaven. Jesus said He would go and prepare a place for us, and then He would come for us. You will find it in the fourteenth chapter of St. John, the third verse. Mother, I want you all to seek for it now—so He can have it ready. I had rather be here as I now feel than to be out and have all my sins upon me as they were when I came home last Spring. Mother, Jesus says, "Come and follow me, and I will save you." I look up and say, "Blessed Jesus." Then He smiles on me. Oh, mother, you don't know how happy I am. It is all because I am going to State Prison—it is because God is with me, and Jesus, my dear Savior. Good-bye, my dear mother. Your affectionate son, EGBERT D. CARY.

TRICKS OF SWINDLERS.

Confidence Men at the New-Haven Railroad Depot—Several Arrests—The Latest Operator.

Within the past few months a great many complaints have been made to the directors of the New-Haven Railroad by victims of confidence operators at the depot in Twenty-sixth-street and Fourth-avenue, and though the utmost vigilance has been exerted by the employes of the Company, until recently their efforts have been rewarded with but slight success. An investigation of the method of the operators, and the frequency and boldness of their successes, resulted in the discovery that the depot was infested by a regularly organized gang of experienced confidence men, strong in the assurance of their success and the failure of the authorities to secure their arrest. The last few weeks, however, have served to dissipate this illusion, and already eight confidence men have been imprisoned, with a favorable prospect of being sent to State Prison at an early date. Yesterday another of the gang was secured by Officer MARRIN of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, while sporting in Madison-avenue, and the circumstances which led to his arrest convey a fair idea of the system so successfully pursued by his companions. On Friday evening last, an old gentleman named SAMUEL RECORD, a resident of Rockfield, about fifty miles from Portland, was awaiting the starting of the 8 o'clock train in the New-York and New-Haven Railroad Depot, when he was accosted by a gentlemanly-looking man, who asked him when the train left. Mr. RECORD replied, when his interrogator immediately seated himself near him, and proceeded to engage him in conversation. Unacquainted with the thousand and one opportunities which City life affords the sharper for the exercise of his craft, and unsuspecting any covert design, Mr. RECORD willingly confided to him the nature of his engagements in the City, telling him he was proceeding to Portland, and was well pleased when he ascertained that his agreeable companion was traveling by the same train and would accompany him to his destination. General topics were discussed, the stranger ingratiating himself completely into his confidence, and as the hour for the starting of the train approached, the stranger told Mr. RECORD that his mother and sister were staying in a house a few blocks distant, and they were to join him in his journey. Mr. RECORD offered no objection to an invitation to go and be introduced to them, and together they went to a dry goods store in Thirtieth-street, where it was stated that they resided. On entering the house, however, the stranger, in apparent chagrin, said that they had left for the depot, and as his mother was his purse-bearer, and he desired to make a few purchases, he felt in an awkward position. Mr. RECORD was easily induced to proffer his assistance, and asked how much money he required. The stranger asked how much he would be able to loan, at the same time making ample apology for the inconvenience to which he was subjecting him. Mr. RECORD immediately gave him all the money he possessed, $170, and the stranger having made some purchases, they returned to the depot. Here, again, they failed to find the ladies they were in quest of, and, at the stranger's suggestion, they went a second time to Thirtieth-street. The stranger requested Mr. RECORD to wait for him a few minutes while he went in and saw if they were there, and then entered, closing the door after him. Immediately the truth flashed on Mr. RECORD's mind, and hastily following, he saw his late companion leaving the house by another door and running off at a rapid pace. Pursuit was fruitless, and having made some inquiries of the proprietor in regard to his knowledge of the man, he discovered that he was totally unknown there. The case was reported to the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and yesterday Officer MERRIN arrested ISAAC SIMMONSON, a well-known "cross-man" of the Eighth Ward, from the description given of him by Mr. RECORD. On his person were found nine counterfeit $20 gold pieces, besides a quantity of "the queer." He was arraigned before Judge SHANDLEY, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday afternoon, and positively identified as connected with the transaction. On examination he denied the allegation, but stated that he knew by whom RECORD had been swindled, and refused to reveal his name. He was committed for examination.

Equation of Payments.

Prof. WARE's offer of $10,000 for the best rule for the equation of payments has drawn out a very exciting competition between the mathematicians all over the country. The rules already received by Prof. WARE and the Messrs. GREENBAUM BROTHERS, in whose hands the money is deposited, come from every section of the country, and include some marvelous mathematical efforts. The award for the best plan will be made Dec. 1, 1870, at the Astor House, at which place all interested parties will assemble at 12 o'clock. The judges appointed are the chief book-keepers of Messrs. H. B. CLAFLIN & CO., Messrs. A. T. STEWART & CO., Messrs. AARON C. CLAFLIN & CO., Messrs. JAY COOKE & CO. and the Adams Express Company.

Railway Accidents in New-Jersey.

About 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a brakeman on the Morris and Essex Railroad was fatally injured at the coal docks at Hoboken. The man, whose name is DORAN, was working on a coal train on the trestle works when he fell from the train and was run over. Both feet were severed. He was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, where he died about 4 o'clock.

RICHARD RANKIN, a son of JAMES RANKIN, of Jersey City, was seriously injured on Sunday afternoon on the New-York and Erie Railway, at Greycourt Station, about sixty miles above Jersey City. RANKIN was engaged in coupling the cars of a coal train when he was caught between two of the cars. Three of his ribs were broken and he was otherwise badly injured. He was taken to his home in Jersey City.

Criminals Sent to Prison.

At the Court of General Sessions, before Judge BEDFORD, yesterday, WM. BROOKS, who was caught in the act of stealing $300 from the pocket of Mr. S. WHITLOCK in a Broadway stage, was convicted and sent to State Prison for five years. Judge BEDFORD told the prisoner that he was known to be a bad man, and that the Grand Jury would have been justified in indicting him for robbery instead of larceny.

LUKE BUSH, indicted for larceny from the person, was discharged, the complainant having left for Europe.

THOS. LEE pleaded guilty to burglary, but was discharged on suspended sentence, owing to his previous good character.

THOS. MOORE, accused of assaulting and robbing AUGUST POWERS, was found guilty, and was subsequently sent to State Prison for twelve years and six months.

The Court then adjourned until this morning. Mr. ALGERON S. SULLIVAN acts as District-Attorney.

An Advance in Gold.

The gold market was considerably excited yesterday, by the news from Europe, and particularly by the fall of prices of bonds in London. Some of the operators seemed to consider that a general European war was impending, and the sooner they purchased gold the better. The room was pretty well filled by 8½ o'clock in the morning, and the earliest sales were made at 112¼@112⅜. Prominent among the operators was a broker for a wealthy Cuban, who sold in the neighborhood of $3,500,000 in blocks, the most of which averaged $500,000 each. These sales stopped the advance temporarily, but later in the day the price rose to 113¾ and then gradually fell to 113¼, under the pressure of large sales. The transactions were heavy, and it was estimated that about $100,000,000 would pass through the Clearing-house during the day.

Jolson's Last—Application for a Warrant for the Arrest of Judge Dowling.

D. WEMYSS JOBSON, a self-nominated candidate for Congress for the Fourth District at the recent election, appeared at the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday afternoon, and made application for a warrant for the arrest of Justice DOWLING on a charge of slander. He stated that for years he occupied a prominent position in all revolutionary movements for Irish independence, and that within the last twelve months Judge DOWLING had circulated a report that he was a British spy, with the view of destroying his influence with the Fenian organization. He repudiated the allegation, and added that had the slander been of a different nature he would not have noticed it; but as affecting his attachment to his native land, it was insupportable. Mr. JOBSON then made a lengthened statement of his own private affairs, and commenced to speak in very uncomplimentary terms of Judge DOWLING, when Judge SHANDLEY signified his intention of refusing to entertain the application, and ordered his summary ejectment from the Court.

The Belt Railroad Strike.

The Belt Railroad drivers' strike remains nominally unchanged, though some of the conductors are volunteering as drivers, deeming the cause of the strikers unwise and uncalled for. Yesterday there were twenty cars running, the regular complement being thirty-four. Some of the drivers and conductors with whom our reporter conversed yesterday, say that the present strike is perfectly groundless. Seven weeks ago, when they struck, two new time-tables were made out—one for the conductors, and one for the drivers—with which the latter expressed themselves perfectly satisfied. About this

POLICE TRANSGRESSIONS.

A Man Arrested for Having His Trunk Stolen—An Arrest that was Not Unwarranted.

Commissioner BOSWORTH, yesterday, investigated thirty-two complaints against patrolmen, and, as usual, they were with few exceptions for neglect of duty and violations of the rules. Patrolman JAMES BIRD, of the Fifteenth Precinct, was charged by Capt. HEDDEN with improper conduct, and the facts developed a comedy of errors engendered by stupidity. Mr. JOHN H. DONNELL, of No. 95 Clinton-place, going up from dinner on the evening of the 28th of October, found that his room had been entered and his trunk stolen during his absence. From the fact that the door was locked on the inside, and the window, which is level with the roof of an extension common to all the houses, was open, he was convinced that the trunk had been taken out over the roof, and he believed into the house of Mrs. RUTH GUERIN, No. 97 Clinton-place. He went out into the street, and joined by GEORGE HANKINS, of No. 91 Clinton-place, searched for an officer until BIRD was found. He informed of the facts of the case, marched up to No. 91 with the two citizens, and, the door being opened by the servant, demanded admittance to search the house. While he was parleying, Mrs. GUERIN appeared, and learning his object, became quite excited, and declaring her husband to be an influential official at Police Head-quarters, directed the officer to arrest the two citizens and she would make a complaint against them. BIRD obeyed her order, but when he got to the Station-house Capt. HEDDEN promptly discharged the gentlemen upon learning the facts and the complaint against BIRD. It transpired on the trial that the husband of Mrs. GUERIN is a doorman, and that BIRD had been a member of the force two months. Judge BOSWORTH, remarking that BIRD had been a policeman quite long enough, referred the case to the Board.

Policman JACOB W. DYCKMAN, of the Broadway Squad, was charged with improper conduct by PETER H. YOUNG, of No. 240 Water-street, in arresting him without cause on the stoop of No. 681 Broadway. The officer stated that YOUNG and others being on the stoop, which is a rendezvous for "sucker" gamblers, he ordered him off. Capt. MILLS, being called on, explained that a "sucker gambler" is a "roper-in," but that the explanation being worse than the original difficulty, he got out of technicalities, and Judge BOSWORTH finally learned that "sucker" is one who inveigles strangers into the gambling dens. The case was referred to the Board, which will probably decide that the conduct of DYCKMAN in making the arrest was the reverse of improper.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 7. Deming vs. United States.—Motion to restore to the docket denied—Opinion of the Court.—In the Supreme Court, the motion to restore case No. 7, Deming vs. the United States, (one of those cases supposed to involve the legal tender question,) to the docket for hearing, was to-day denied, Mr. Justice Swayne deliverning the opinion. The Court alluded to the various postponements of the Deming and Latham cases, before the day of dismissal, as matters indicating deliberation and consultation, and noted the date of the issue of the mandate; and it was said that although it be granted that the dismissal was made without Deming's knowledge or consent, still his silence thereafter—being advised of the dismissal, another court remaining in session ten days after the award—amounted to an acquiescence and relinquishment. The delay in making the motion, even if matters were as he represented, was held to be fatal. As to the consent of the Attorney General to the restoration of the case, it was said that as the dismissal of the appeals left the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the United States, in full force, they can sustain no prejudice by the denial of this motion. The consent of the Attorney-General was therefore held out of view as an element to be considered. The motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the Court, and all the Justices were of opinion that it ought to be denied.

No. 212.—The Steam-ship Columbia vs. Bunting.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New-York. This was a case of collision between the Columbia and the propeller Jersey Blue, on the Hudson River, off the Battery, on the 7th January, 1860. The District Court was of opinion that the collision was occasioned by the attempt of the propeller to cross the bows of the steamer while the former was making way to East River, and the libel was dismissed. The Circuit Court held that the steamer was at fault in attempting to pass between the propeller and the east shore, when there was an unobstructed channel on the other side, in a direct course to the sea, and reversed the decree of the District Court. The Supreme Court sustained the view of the Circuit Court, and affirmed its decree. Mr. Justice STRONG delivered the opinion.

No. 216—De Cryg, lessee, vs. Craig et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Maryland. This is a case of ejectment for the recovery of a tract of land in Kent County, Maryland. The questions presented were upon the admissibility of certain deeds, and of a survey, it being claimed that the Circuit Court erred in its rulings and views. The judgment was not affirmed. Mr. Justice MILLER delivered the opinion.

SUPREME COURT—GENERAL TERM.

Before Judges Ingraham and Cardozo.

LIABILITIES OF NOTARIES.

Commercial Bank of Paducah vs. Varnum.—The Paducah Bank owned a bill of exchange, drawn by a firm at St. Louis upon a bank at New-York, which bill was sent to the Metropolitan Bank for collection. At maturity it was presented for payment by Mr. Turney, a notary, and a note of the presentment made at the time in the register used by him and his partner, Mr. Varnum: also a notary and the notary for the Metropolitan Bank, in whose name the certificate of protest was made. At a subsequent period, Turney annexed his own certificate of protest so that, on a suit being brought by the Paducah Bank against the indorser at St. Louis, the bill appeared in proper form with the certificates of the respective notaries to the extent named in his claim for damages. Before the time named he was in the receipt of $2,500 per annum for administering to the spiritual wants of a colored church, the support of which has since been withdrawn, and he is now forced to make a living by selling newspapers.

The defendants deny all malicious intent, and state that before the warrant was issued charging Mr. Wilson with the theft in question, Justice Lynch had been fully apprised of all the facts bearing upon the matter, and advised them to take the action which they took. The case is still on.

SUPERIOR COURT—GENERAL TERM—NOV. 14.

USURY.

Merchants' Exchange National Bank vs. Commercial Ware-house Company.—Cornelius Oakley stored with the defendants 204 cases of tobacco, receiving ware-house receipts therefor to the amount of $50,000. These receipts were several times received, each time interest being paid to defendants at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; also, one per cent commission and some additional compensation in the nature of expenses for storage, &c. Oakley assigned the property, subject to the liens of defendants, to his brother, by whom it was pledged to plaintiffs. Defendants subsequently sold the property to cover the amount due for storage, commissions and expenses. Plaintiffs then brought their action to recover the value of the property, placing it at $100,00, and sought to establish their claim by annulling the transactions between Oakley and the defendants on the ground of usury, claiming that the amount paid for storage, &c., was paid as usury, under cover of a different name. This complaint defendants demurred to, on the ground that a corporation could not avail itself of the usury law, but the demurrer was overruled by the presiding Judge, on the ground that while a corporation could not take advantage of the Usury law, the same did not take advantage of the plaintiffs could. From this decision appeal was taken to the Court at General Term. Decision reserved.

MONDAY, Nov. 14—P. M.

The confirmed Cable news of the position of Russia in regard to the Treaty of Paris of 1856 violently affected the Gold market this morning, the extreme advance from Saturday Afternoon being 1⅛ ₱ cent., or from 111⅛ to 112¼ ₱ cent. There was much excitement in the Gold Room throughout the day, the turn of the market in the Afternoon being downward from the extreme advance, and the fluctuations between 112¼ @ 111¼ ₱ cent. quite frequent. The London and Frankfort markets have been (and still remain) seriously disturbed by the news from St. Petersburg, but the later telegrams this Afternoon look as though the effect upon the English and American Funds had spent itself for the present. Our Bankers, here, while buying and selling Gold on the varying phases of the markets abroad, are not yet able to discover that anything like a general European War can grow out of the abrogation of the Treaty of Paris. The American sympathies, as in the Crimean War, which eventuated in the Treaty so restrictive of the rights of Russia in the Black Sea, are likely to be with our ancient ally of the North, and the relation of the question to the Prussian War with France, would undoubtedly strengthen this feeling, should England, Austria and Italy, or either Power separately, attempt to interfere. But the probabilities are that the occasion will not arise to call forth this sympathy or to cause a prolonged disturbance to our markets. The London Stock Exchange denotes, as yet, no evidence that the English Government is disposed to make the affair a cause of War, even if prepared, which it is not, to dispute the action of Russia. The extreme fall of the English Funds is about one ₱ cent. Late in the day the quotation was nearly or quite as high as on Saturday Afternoon.

Our own Public Funds close as high as on Saturday—109¾@109¾ ₱ cent. on the 1867 Five-twenties, after falling in the morning to 109¼ ₱ cent. sales. The Foreign Exchanges are, perhaps, stiffer by ⅛@¼₱ cent. on short-sight Bills on London, at the termination of business, after a somewhat brisk demand early in the day. The 60 days rate is 109¼ ₱ cent., and short sight 109¾@109¾. Bankers. The Money market is comparatively quiet under the news, while in the Domestic Produce market the export demand for Flour and Grain improved. There was some increase of activity in Money from the Brokers at 5 ₱ cent., and, in exceptional cases, 6 ₱ cent.

The news was employed adversely to the general Stock speculation through the forenoon, but without much success, as buyers came in with considerable freedom for the New-York and Western Railways, and at the close of the day the changes in prices from Saturday Afternoon were not important. The traffic on the Western Roads, now that Lake navigation is about closed, is more than equal, in the main, to the corresponding season of last year, and the prospects of the Winter business West, decidedly better, corresponding with the prevailing healthy trade of the country and the unusual ease, for November, of the Money markets on the Sea-board.

The transactions of the day at the Treasury Office are small. The daily Customs receipts are now nearly equal to the payments of Gold Interest on the Public Debt. The sum of about $4,000,000 of the 5 ₱ cents. of 1871, advertised six weeks since, to be prepaid, has not yet been presented, and the Bonds are now likely to be withheld, for the greater part, until due on the first of January.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Saturday Afternoon:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE WAR.

The material results from the victory at Orleans are claimed in Tours to have been greater than at first reported. Many Germans have been found concealed in the woods and outbuildings of the towns, where they took refuge, and several cannon, abandoned in the hasty retreat, have been discovered. A French General who failed to capture a body of 5,000 Bavarians who were surrounded in a wood, and who subsequently escaped, has been dismissed from the army. Promotions on the field were numerous. The Army of the Loire is reported to be advancing upon Toury, now held by the Germans, who recently retired from Orleans. A battle was expected there yesterday. Gen. D'AURELLES DE PALADINES has been reinforced and now has a large and effective army. Gen. VON DER TANN officially reports his losses in the engagements about Orleans at forty-two officers and 667 men in killed and wounded. The moral effect of the recent success is said by the London Times correspondent to be incalculable.

The German bombardment at Thionville has resulted in firing the city at different points, and on Saturday the entire city seemed to be burning. The Germans have advanced to La Fer, in the north. The inundation of the environs of Dunkirk by the French is proposed as a measure of defense, and the Belgian authorities, in view of the fact that greater damage would result to the Belgian population across the border than to anybody else, have entered into negotiations with the French authorities to prevent it. The Germans are steadily advancing in the east, toward Lyons, and they now occupy Dole. GARIBALDI'S head-quarters are at Chagny. The towns of Isle-sur-le-Doubs and Cheval, both in the Department of the Doubs, have been taken by the Prussians, the French retiring before the advance. A tunnel on the Strasbourg Railroad has fallen and shut off German communications by that line. According to a London dispatch Paris is "distressingly short of provisions." The Gardes Mobiles, of Evreux, repulsed the Prussians in an engagement there on Saturday last.

On the 7th inst., the Prussian steamer Meteor and the French war steamer Bouvet, carrying three and five guns respectively, entered the port of Havana, and soon afterward the French mail steamer Nouveau Monde sailed, but put back on being followed by the Meteor. By an arrangement entered into the two war vessels went outside the line of Spanish neutral waters, and on the 9th they engaged in a naval duel in which the German was the victor, the Frenchman seeking the protection of neutral waters. A Spanish man-of-war, the Hernando Cortes, which had accompanied the belligerents and witnessed the fight, fired a gun as a signal that the combat had closed. The Captain-General and other prominent Spanish officials were on board the Hernando Cortes, the former acting as umpire. The Bouvet reports one killed and several wounded, and the Meteor three killed and one wounded. Both vessels are repairing at Havana and another encounter is expected.

The Indépendance Belge, of yesterday, says that while the neutrality of the Black Sea was always intolerable to Russia, no revision of the territorial stipulations of the treaty was asked. The Vienna Freie Presse gives the points of the circular of the Russian Government, which relate to the prohibition of frigates in the Black Sea. The note demands equal liberty for Turkey also, leaving the remaining terms of the treaty valid. A Berlin banker has been arrested on an accusation of treason, in having made a bid for the French loan. The residences of the captured French Marshals has been assigned thus: CANROBERT, at Stuttgardt, in Wirtemburg; LE BOEUF, at Bonn, in Rhenish Prussia, and BAZAINE at Aix-la-Chapelle, near the Belgian border.

Tammany's Great Ally.

The result of the election has set a great many people, who see how difficult it is to defeat the Ring by any possible adjustment or rearrangement of the political machinery, to ask themselves seriously once more whether there is really no possibility of reaching and breaking up the great mass of ignorance and vice, to the existence of which the Ring really owes its victories, far more than to its possession of the Courts and the Legislature. It is this which, after all, furnishes it with the basis for its frauds. Such tremendous structures cannot be put up absolutely without foundation. In order to pile up twenty or thirty thousand fraudulent votes, a substructure of about as many more is absolutely necessary. Now, it gets this substructure out of the gross ignorance, intemperance, and viciousness of a large and, we are afraid, increasing body of New-York poor, and, of course, mainly foreign poor. There is in this City an Irish population that would fill any Irish city, and there is a German population that would fill any German city, except three or four. On these masses American influences, or, indeed, any directly purifying influences, except those of the common school, cannot be said to be brought to bear at all; and the influence of the common school will, of course, only be felt in our politics, very slowly and feebly, so long as the ranks of the adults are constantly being reinforced by immigration. The poorer Irish population of this City, and, still more, the Germans, owing to the difference of language, are really nearly as much cut off from contact with American ideas, or with the currents of American society, as if they lived still in Dublin or Cork, or Munich or Cassel. The loudest and most potent of the voices by which American society is moved, whether they come from the pulpit or platform, do not reach them. The exhortations and denunciations of the American Press, as far as they are concerned, die on the desert air long before they penetrate the tenement. For them, the lecturer travels, and the library and the church stand open in vain. They are veritably an urbs in urbe, a community separated from the American public by a moral and social gulf as wide and deep as the ocean, and, thus far, less passable. As long as we cannot bridge this gulf over, it is, in the opinion of many people, useless to try to oust the Ring from its jurisdiction in this City.

How can it be bridged over? Is there no way by which the good influences of American life and manners can make themselves felt in slums from which TWEED draws his cohorts? It seems as if this were really the great, and indeed only, problem of New-York City politics at this moment. Unless we can make the ignorant majority see that the City is badly governed, and that what makes it is badly governed, it looks as if no arrangement we can make of the machinery through which they express their will will be of much use. There is one fixed idea current among the ignorant poor which must be got rid of before any great change in our municipal affairs can be looked for, and that is the idea that the rich, and especially the owners of real estate here, can be heavily taxed as a separate class without detriment to those who do not own this species of property, or any property. This doctrine is not openly taught by the Democratic demagogues; that would hardly do; but it is taught in the groggeries and smaller reunions of the faithful, and taught to much purpose. Nine-tenths of the laborers of this City believe that as long as the tax-gatherer does not come to them for money, they escape taxation. They do not know, or cannot be persuaded, that every cent the owner of houses or stores has to pay to the City Hall thieves, he faithfully adds on to his rents, and recovers, dollar for dollar, from everybody who hires houses of him, from the great Broadway store-keeper down to the miserable room-keeper of the tenement-house. We suppose it may be said with perfect accuracy that Mr. ASTOR does not pay a cent of taxation on his vast possessions in real estate; that is, he gets at least seven per cent. on his investment, and makes his tenants, in addition to this, pay all other charges.

Of course, it is on the very poor that this load of taxation falls with the heaviest weight. Probably no class in the world pays a higher rental, not even the occupants of the most "palatial" of the mansions on Fifth-avenue, than the poor creatures who live in the tenement-houses of this City, and vote the Tammany ticket on election day; and probably no class is so completely in the dark as to the reason why they are so miserably lodged.

If the truth of the matter could be brought home to them, it would undoubtedly affect politics in this City very materially; but it cannot be brought home to them unless the well-to-do classes win their confidence by giving substantial proofs of interest in their condition, and such proofs they do not now give. The charities of the rich in this City are enormous. Vast sums of money are contributed by them every year for the promotion of various benevolent undertakings, the foundation of educational institutions, the relief of the destitute poor, of the sick, and of orphans and widows; the spread of the Gospel among the heathen, the building of churches. But it may be said, without exaggeration, that in the condition of the ignorant laboring men of the City they show no interest whatever, or next to none. This class is miserably lodged, and nothing is done to improve their lodgings; they are miserably fed, and nothing is done to improve their food; they are left without other entertainment than the groggery, and nothing is done to provide any substitute for it; the means of communication between their homes and the places where they labor is slow, scanty, and dear, and nothing is done by private enterprise to improve it. All that the poor man in this City knows of the well-to-do Americans is that they are a people who lead a more comfortable existence than he does, and are fully and earnestly occupied in taking care of themselves, getting as much out of him as they can, and giving him as little as possible in return. Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that he gives his vote to those who take the trouble to follow him to his wretched home, and promise to make his life more tolerable. They deceive him; but the Republican Party can and ought to become the "poor man's friend," in deed as well as in name. It should labor to open the eyes of the workman to the shameful way in which "Tammany" imposes upon his ignorance and good nature. In that way we could reach the classes now betrayed by our political foes.

The Designs of Russia.

Some time ago the report came to us from Europe that Russia was preparing to take part in the present war. It was at once assumed in some quarters that she would inevitably fight for France. We pointed out then that the true ally of Russia, in the state of affairs which we now witness in Europe, was Prussia—and we called the attention of our readers to the fact that the Czar had been from the first rather ostentatious in his efforts to keep on good terms with Germany. He has sent messages of congratulation to the Queen of Prussia after important victories, and has given decorations to several German Princes. We now hear something more definite about his plans. The time has come when it is believed at St. Petersburg that disguises can be thrown aside. It is said that Russia has torn up the treaty of Paris of 1856. This would render the Black Sea once more a Russian lake, and remove a restriction which must have been not a little vexatious and humiliating to the Czar and his people.

We have little doubt that when all the secrets of this eventful year come to be unfolded, it will be found that Russia had a secret treaty with Prussia from the outset of the war. BISMARCK has a genius for making engagements of this kind. There can be no question that he obtained the promise of NAPOLEON not to interfere in the Austrian campaign, and NAPOLEON did not receive the expected "consideration" afterward, but that did not make much difference to Count BISMARCK. He probably intends to fulfill his pledges toward Russia, whatever they may be. Hence it has been quite clear for months past that King WILLIAM and the Emperor ALEXANDER were acting in concert.

It is very difficult to conjecture how far the present plans of the Czar extend. Does he want to make another dash at the "sick man?" If so, nothing stands in his way. The old alliance which was so fatal to his father, the Emperor NICHOLAS, is now dissolved. France must be powerless for aggression for many years to come. It is in the last degree improbable that England will ever take up arms again in defense of Turkey. Russia will therefore find no third power to oppose her, and the theory of many years standing is that English supremacy in India is threatened by the Eastern policy of Russia. But this idea has never stood the test of examination. The mountains of Afghanistan are an impassable barrier to Russian advances, and the people of India themselves would be little disposed to change a foreign rule to which they have become accustomed, for one which they only know through the medium of unfavorable reports. Russia would never find the native population of India willing to fight for her.

The Czar is probably determined to get rid of the penalties imposed upon his country through the failure of his father in the Crimean War, and all other aims he may be content to hold in reserve. It is the usual fate of all such treaties as that of 1856. The power which is tied down is submissive only while it cannot put forth the strength necessary to burst its bands. Thus it will be with any treaty imposed upon France after the termination of the present war. Some day or other a new trial will be moved for in the cause now apparently being decided at so vast a cost. Russia has bided her time, and she knows perfectly well that the power which she has most dreaded will not be very troublesome to her again. It may be seriously doubted whether the British Cabinet will even take the trouble to enter a protest against any course the Czar and his advisers may choose to adopt.

The Next House of Representatives.

Calculations relating to the political complexion of the next House of Representatives possess a general interest, and they may be in some cases approximately correct. But it is as yet too early to fix the precise strength of parties. The returns of the recent elections are incomplete. From Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, and Florida further information is needed before determining absolutely their Congressional status; and, even when the figures are received, a certain degree of doubt will hang over the positions of some of the members elect. The successful candidates on the Grata Brown ticket in Missouri, for example, being reported as "Liberal Republicans," are classified among the regular Republicans; although it is obvious that their course when the Forty-second Congress assembles will be materially affected by occurrences in the interval. The same remark applies to one or two of the Southern members. Their ultimate affiliations are somewhat contingent upon circumstances which do not at present admit of exact estimate. Moreover, in five States the Congressional delegations remain to be elected. Georgia, California, Texas, New-Hampshire and Connecticut are all to be heard from, and in regard to some of them the probabilities are susceptible of nothing better than guess-work.

But though precise results are at present unattainable, enough is known to render certain the presence of an adequate working majority on the Republican side. The estimates of that majority range from thirty-five to fifty—the former being almost the lowest possible figure, and the general prospect indicating that, with fair success in the elections to be held, the majority will not vary much from forty-five. It is evident, therefore, that the opposition, however well organized, will not be able to embarrass the Administration, or to impede the development of the Republican policy. The country has nothing to fear from the presence of a disciplined opposition, whose increased strength may be expected to carry with it a sense of responsibility that has not of late been apparent in Democratic tactics. We shall have in opposition a party instead of a faction; the trickery and inconsistency of factious warfare will probably give place to a defined and an intelligible programme. Apart, too, from the change to be hoped for in the general course of the opposition, we cannot doubt that a consciousness of lessened voting power will impel the majority to husband their strength, and to cultivate the moral power which proceeds from a right use of opportunities. To secure unity there must be forbearance, a general tone of moderation, and an avoidance of needless controversies. From these considerations the Republican Party may gain much, and can lose nothing. Its majority, ample for all practical purposes, will not be so large that the party can afford to be indifferent to causes of internal trouble, whether proceeding from dissensions or rash counsel. The Republican policy will still, beyond all doubt, prevail. And we may hope that the policy itself will vindicate the confidence of the country, and make certain Republican success in 1872.

Upon the President the reduction of the majority will entail greater responsibility than can exist so long as Congress is absolute master of the situation. With the majority as it is now, the veto power has existed only in name. A two-thirds majority in Congress rendered criticism futile, and Executive correction a mere matter of form. It will be otherwise in the next Congress. And the fact will impose upon the President a serious duty in the treatment of all matters that come before him for approval. The Administration may look for more cordial support than it received last session, and the action of Congress will be benefited, because restrained by the opinions of a President in general harmony with the party out of doors and with the people.

The War and Ourselves.

The European Press has commented with severity upon the cynical attitude of that portion of the Press here which has assumed that the war is not a thing to deplore, because, in any event, it will benefit this country. Such journalists have seen in Brother Jonathan a modern Iago, who, during the fight between his friends sagely reflects: "Now, whether he kill Cassio, or Cassio kill him, or each do kill the other, every way makes my gain." Readers of the TIMES will, however, bear witness to the fact that from the outset it has taken an opposite view, and that events have so far justified the anticipations expressed in its columns.

Our belief has been that let the cause, progress, or termination of the war be what they may, the effect upon the industrial interests of this country must be prejudicial rather than advantageous. As a matter of fact, this may be said to be clearly indicated by the course of the gold market. Whatever tends to prolong hostilities puts gold up; whatever tends toward an armistice or a peace puts gold down. This, however, may be reckoned a temporary or an uncertain indication. In the absence of definite changes in other values, the significance of the gold barometer may be disputed. But, if we turn to the records of our most important markets, we see figures about which there can be no question. The prices of cotton and of grain have fallen since July 19—the former from twenty-five to thirty, and the latter thirty-three and one-third per cent. If we export this season the same number of bales as during the cotton year of 1870, the payment received for the same will, therefore, be less by over fifty millions of dollars; and whether the prospects of grain-growers are damaged, as we have apprehended, by the vast supplies from Eastern Europe or not, the cash received for their products is likely to fall short of sanguine expectations.

When two powerful nations, consisting of some eighty millions of people, engage in such a war, there must naturally arise consequences for the rest of the world of a very serious character. All other nations are affected in a greater or lesser degree. The United States are especially concerned, because of certain peculiar conditions. One of these is that something over a thousand millions of our debt are owned by the combatants, as well as some three hundred millions of our railroad stocks and bonds. Another is that we have been in the habit of receiving yearly from the same nations about one million of emigrants, who, by the money brought with them, and the labor they have performed, have continually added to our wealth and prosperity. A contemplation of these important elements will lead to grave inferences. The United States are in much the same position as an individual trader who is liable to be called on at any moment to pay a large debt on which he has been doing business, while at the same time he is deprived of the labor supply with which he has been accustomed regularly to develop his resources. Perhaps he may not be forced to pay the debt off-hand, and perhaps he can keep up his industrial enterprises without the aid of the usual yearly influx of fresh hands; but the chance of such double good fortune is, to say the least, uncertain.

It may be said that the current quotations of securities, whose value depends on the steady progress of our interior development, do not reflect this uncertainty, and the statement is in a measure correct. But to get intelligent notions respecting such things we must look below the surface. There is, sometimes, as we have repeatedly pointed out, a wide disparity between the public demand and the demand which is needful to cover the exigencies of speculators. One of the first results of the European war was the accumulation in London of much floating capital owned on the Continent. A considerable part of this money, passing through the hands of the bankers, is now lent out in this country; and thus, without doubt, is artificially sustaining enterprises, the stock of which, if they depended on public confidence and inquiry alone, would instantly depreciate. This is one of the primary consequences to a neutral State of a great war between nations in close commercial relations with itself, and is perhaps too much lost sight of. Its immediate symptoms may be encouraging, and the prognosis, to appearance, salutary. But the flush is that of fever, not of health, and reaction is certain to follow.

Our Wealthy Men.

One of the chief obstacles at the present time to a reform in our Municipal Government is the cowardice of our rich men. In years past they have been apathetic or indifferent; but, thanks to the reckless extravagance of the Ring, and its constantly increasing demands on our tax-payers for money, apathy and indifference are no longer possible. With an annual taxation of twenty-six millions of dollars to meet the expenses of a Government which, as Judge LEDWITH stated in a speech the other evening, could be better administered than it now is for twelve millions, it is no wonder that property-owners of the City are at length aroused to the necessity of doing something to save the City from impending bankruptcy.

But what do they propose? Are they going to combine together and resist the encroachments of the secret oligarchy that now rules this City, or will they tamely submit and strive, each one for himself, to make the best terms he can with the common enemy? They stand in the position of an armed body of a thousand men assailed by less than half a dozen highwaymen. It is for them to say whether they will rout the enemy, or whether they will surrender in a body, and allow their pockets to be rifled. Their destiny is in their own hands, and their cause is the cause, not alone of the rich, but of every man, rich or poor, who desires an honest and economical Government. With organization and unity among themselves, the land owners of this City could carry any election they pleased; they could put honest and capable men in office, and reduce their annual taxation one-third, while at the same time they secured a better and more efficient Municipal Government than we have had for ten years.

But they need not wait for another election before beginning their work. Bad as are the majority of the men who now hold official positions in this City, they are nevertheless amenable to law, and can be made to do their duty. They must be taught that they are the servants of the people, and not their masters. Citizens must learn to demand of them as a right what they now ask as a favor, and generally ask in vain. It would be easy to select a hundred names from among the prominent citizens and tax-payers of New-York who, if they chose, could speedily remedy the larger share of the abuses of our Municipal Government. So, too, it would be easy to select the names of fifty lawyers from among the twenty-five hundred members of the Bar in this City, who could put a stop to the scandalous corruption of the Judiciary which is bringing the Bench and Bar into disrepute. The moral weight of these names, fearlessly used in behalf of reform, would compel corrupt officials, whether on the Bench or in municipal places, to mend their ways or resign their offices. But what do we see? Lawyers, instead of uniting to overthrow the iniquity that is dragging the entire profession to ruin, vie with each other in the effort to become first favorites with the corrupt Judges whom they all despise. Tax-payers, instead of combining for mutual protection against the unscrupulous officials of the "Ring," sneak off, one after another, to the Tax Commissioners' office, to beg for a petty reduction of the assessments on their property. Thus, through cowardice and lack of unity among our leading citizens and men of wealth, a Ring of less than half a dozen adventurers are allowed to "run" the City Government in their own interest, to perpetuate themselves in power as long as they choose, and to disburse twenty-six millions of dollars of the people's money annually, without giving the public any details of the expenditure, or any report of the condition of the City's finances.

This condition of things may be entirely satisfactory to JOHN JACOB ASTOR and his colleagues of the Connolly whitewashing Committee, but to the great body of tax-payers, who are compelled to pay their assessments without deduction, it ought to be a matter of some importance to know what becomes of their money. If they are content with the balance-sheet presented to them by Mr. ASTOR, and care nothing for the particulars of the City accounts, they will doubtless append their names to his certificate of the Controller's integrity; but if they regard the City Treasurer as a responsible public servant, they will apply to him the same rule which they would apply to their own bookkeepers, and unite in demanding a full investigation of his accounts.

An Interview With Napoleon III.

In other columns will be found the report of a highly interesting interview which our special correspondent lately had with the Ex-Emperor of France at Wilhelmshoehe. Among the various points alluded to in this conversation, probably the most interesting will be found to be the opinion entertained by the royal captive on the great question of territorial concession. Whatever were the faults of NAPOLEON III., and late disclosures have shown that they were many and grievous, he must be credited with a tolerably accurate acquaintance with the temper of his late subjects. His unequivocal declaration that no Government whatever can agree to the cession of French provinces and continue to exist, is, therefore, of some little importance at the present juncture. It is perfectly obvious that Prussia is fully determined to extract territorial guarantees from her humiliated foe. The duration of the war thus comes to be a question between the relative force of the determination of either belligerent. If the Ex-Emperor's opinion prove to be well founded, and all existing indications favor its truth, the end of the present war will witness in France a state of social chaos, and a Government supported by foreign bayonets.

We do not think that the earnest disclaimers addressed to our correspondent were needed to convince any candid observer that the fallen Emperor is not the Crœsus which his enemies represent him to be. In spite of the many circumstantial statements that have been put forward, there is really no satisfactory evidence before the public to show that he has accumulated great wealth. The origin of the figures hitherto given has not been above suspicion, and the man who was NAPOLEON III. has not yet sunk so low that his solemn and reiterated assertion is altogether worthless. The presence of the veteran Dr. CONNEAU at Wilhelmshoehe forms a curious historical episode. He was secretary to LOUIS of Holland, the father of the Ex-Emperor, and afterward became physician to his mother, Queen HORTENSE, in the seclusion of Arenemberg. He was arrested with LOUIS NAPOLEON at Boulogne, and shared his cell as a prisoner in the fort of Ham. He was one of the chief agents in aiding the celebrated escape, a service which the prisoner, when Emperor of France, did not fail to repay. And now again the old man is found sharing the captivity of the son, who was so tenderly recommended to his care by an affectionate mother. Had LOUIS BONAPARTE no other redeeming trait but that of having inspired an attachment like this, we would have hesitated, as CARLYLE does with ROBESPIERRE, to visit his life with unqualified condemnation.

MINOR TOPICS.

In Eastern France the advance of the Prussians is not only "steady," as stated by cable dispatches, but is obviously rapid. From indications furnished this morning, there is evidently a concentration of force being effected previous to an advance upon Lyons. The troops that have occupied l'Isle sur Doubs and Clerval are probably part of those released by the capitulation of Neu-Breisach, while those in possession of Dole or Dolf, a place situated about sixty miles south-west of the preceding, have evidently crossed the Saone since the recent occupation of Dijon. At this central point, where three railways converge, they may be expected to await the advance of their comrades from the North. Besançon, the fortified capital of the Department of the Doubs, is the only obstacle of importance between the union of these two divisions of the German Army operating in the East. Chagny, the point at which GARIBALDI and another French General are reported, is situated on the railroad from Dijon to Lyons, and is about forty miles south-west from Dolf, the most advanced Prussian position. The situation is a reproduction on a small scale of the advance to Paris, when MCMAHON at Chalons barred the way to the capital. Curiously enough, there is a Chalons sur Saone a little in advance of Chagny, at which, if anywhere, the French may be expected to unite in the endeavor to bar the way to Lyons."

The Homestead law provides free farms for all, but it requires immediate and continuous settlement as the price of the land to be granted. Some Western veterans of the war ask that this condition shall be so far modified in their favor that every soldier shall be allowed to select a quarter section while it is accessible, and be further allowed "a term of years, say five, to prepare himself with the necessary means to make that land his home." Mr. INGERSOLL, in expressing his readiness to promote such an amendment of the Homestead law, remarks that it would give the soldiers "a chance to get a home before the land speculators have the opportunity to secure all the most desirable land for themselves." But why limit the operation of the amendment to soldiers? And how can the law be relaxed to meet the wants set forth without at the same time fostering speculation in the claims? This is really the difficulty to be overcome.

In these days, when clever diplomatists appear to have become so scarce, one is tempted to inquire what other career has drawn off the class of minds naturally fitted for the conduct of delicate international negotiations. A careful observation of the doings of the "confidence men" known in hotel lobbies and at railroad depots, seems to warrant the conclusion that the possible negotiators of the world have, by a curious fatality, been attracted to the career of swindling. Such a narrative as the one we publish this morning, of the gentleman who was fleeced at the New-Haven Railroad depot, affords another evidence of how appalling is the amount of persuasive talent that has been monopolized by the enemies of society. It need hardly be added that it shows, also, the existence of an amount of ingenuous trustfulness very beautiful to contemplate in a City so replete with rascality.

The effects of the Prussian occupation of France are really becoming too awful. We do not refer to the famine, carnage and pestilence that have followed the terrible reapers of a sanguinary Autumn. These are but the usual concomitants of war, and are past praying against. We do not even deplore the affliction of having champagne marked up fifty cents a pint on restaurant cartes. We are too conscious of the extent to which the native producer may be benefited thereby to consider it an unmixed calamity. But there is a terrible whisper abroad that up-town marriages have become impossible till communications with Paris are restored. Our City belles have decreed it—a fashionable marriage is no marriage at all without a Parisian trousseau. Let Mr. LAWRENCE take note of the fact in the next edition of his treatise on international marriage laws.

There is a charming display of the courtesies of warfare about the naval duel that occurred off Havana, which duly impresses us with the improvements effected by civilization on a highly barbarous pastime. Two sets of naval officers, French and German, meet in a neutral port, and, probably, over mingled potations of white and red wine, arrange to test the merits of their respective ships at a proper distance from the friendly coast. Considering the sport quite equal to a bull-fight, and being, probably, somewhat tired of their late inaction, the sympathetic Spaniards agree to act in the capacity of umpire. The end was probably not tragical enough for the onlooker, as less than half a dozen of the combatants were knocked on the head. It was clearly not tragical enough to prevent the German victors being entertained to dinner, at which, let us hope, the vanquished came in for a toast.

Baron RICASOLI retires from public life at the moment when the grand aspiration of his life is complete—when Italy is one and Rome is her capital. Following, as he did, the administration of a man like CAVOUR, the Baron suffered from comparison with his great predecessor. Throughout his entire public career he has been notably distinguished for his inflexible honesty and straightforwardness. He had the rare good fortune to retain the confidence of the people, as well as of the ecclesiastics, attaining the combination, so difficult in Italy, of a patriot and a friend of the Church. Next to the attainment of national unity, educational and financial reform were his most cherished objects, and the impetus he has given to both will be felt for long years in the future of Italy.

We have lately been exceedingly fortunate in our prominent English visitors. Mr. HUGHES and Mr. MUNDELLA are in their way representative men of all that is best and most vital in English democracy. Closely following upon the addresses of the former, the lecture delivered last evening by Mr. MUNDELLA, helps us to understand the strength of the reforming principle in England in spite of the dead weight of caste and prejudice that has borne it down. A cause that has such advocates cannot be a losing one, and a people that possesses such leaders cannot be much longer withheld from the full heritage of power which belongs to it.

Reopening of the Elevated Railway.

Operations on the elevated railway, in Greenwich-street and Ninth-avenue, were renewed yesterday. Hourly trips between the new depot at the corner of Dey-street, and the present terminus at Twenty-ninth-street, were made. But a single car is in use, and only a limited number of passengers—thirty-five at each trip—were carried. The fare is ten cents, and the time of transit about fifteen minutes. The rate of speed is less than twelve miles an hour—much below the maximum capacity of the engines. A representative of the Company stated that there are ten cars in an unfinished condition on hand, which will be available at an early date. Trips will now be made regularly, leaving Dey-street at the half hours, and Twenty-ninth-street at the even hours. There has been no change, and none is contemplated in the motive power. Although experiments of other propelling forces have been tested, none have succeeded, and the inventor claims that the present endless chain trucks and stationary engine arrangement is all that can be desired. The cast-iron material in the trucks having proved objectionable, is to be substituted by boiler-iron. The spiral-springs, affixed on a horizontal rod, under the car, to act as bumpers, and moderate the jar of the trucks as they strike, have also been improved. It is asserted that in the event of the wheels being displaced from the track, the car could not fall, nor be overturned, but would lodge diagonally between and across the rails.

The company deny that they have failed in any sense, and say that the temporary suspension of operations was for prudential and financial reasons; and that they expect to continue the running of cars uninterruptedly. They explain the cause of the last accident not to have been any defect in the supports of the span, but the unexpected lateral pressure of the car (loaded with 40,000 pounds of iron,) against the outer rail, on the curve, over the street-crossing; that five ordinary passenger car-loads could not have broken the beam as the freight-car did; that the endless wire cable has never broken or failed; nor has any essential portion of the work proved unequal to their expectations and requirements. It is understood that vigorous efforts are on foot to push the road farther up town this Winter, and construct another track on the opposite side of the street in the Spring.

RUTLAND, Vt., Nov. 14.—A desperate and bloody fight took place in the woods in Mount Holly, eighteen miles from this place, on Saturday last, between a gang of French wood-cutters—seventeen in number—and three officers who were endeavoring to arrest them. The Frenchmen were armed with axes, and cut and beat two of the officers in a brutal manner, nearly severing the wrist of one, besides inflicting several severe wounds on the head, and knocking the other insensible with the blow of an ax across his face, after which they kicked and beat him horribly about the face and body. The Frenchmen escaped to the mountains, but this morning thirteen of them were arrested and are now undergoing examination.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 14.—The Massachusetts Grand Lodge of Knights of St. Crispin, at its recent session in Boston, perfected an organization under the charter obtained from the last Legislature, and elected a Board of officers.

The two following decisions were also approved: First, that there shall hereafter be no more strikes in the Crispin organization. Second, that as rapidly as possible, the organization shall be changed into a co-operative one. With a view to the accomplishment of the last-named purpose, the next Legislature will be petitioned to give to the lodge State aid, on the same ground that aid was given the Western and Boston, Hartford and Erie Railroads, the Crispins claiming the principles are identical. There are now upon the rolls of the order about 25,000 men, of whom 8,000, or nearly one-third are foreigners.

CARING FOR THE AGED.

The Methodist Old Lady's Home—Fair for Their Benefit in Apollo Hall.

The Baptists had hardly closed their Fair for their Aged Home when the Methodist churches of the City reopened Apollo Hall for a similar entertainment for their Home for the Aged, in West Forty-second-street, and last night it was inaugurated under the very best auspices. The following churches have tables and booths in the Fair: St. Luke's has a very prominent canopied table in the north end of the hall, the pillars trimmed with evergreens and the tables laden with a variety of useful and ornamental articles. A richly upholstered arm-chair, to be voted to Rev. Dr. FOSTER, of Drew Theological Seminary, is theirs also, and the votes and the dollars were coming in fast last night.

Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church has a well-stocked table of articles useful for children's and ladies' wear, and a variety of toys, toilet articles and such like. A richly-embroidered shawl, very valuable, and a young Saratoga belle, with a full Summer outfit, including changes of apparel for every day in the week, jewels, &c., all neatly packed away in one of those enormous trunks usually seen leaving hotels and private houses just before the Fourth of July, awaits a purchaser with a roll of fifty or one hundred dollar bills in his or her pocket-book. Miss FANY LANE and Miss MARTHA CURRY preside at this table. But besides these there is another table containing a pyramid of coffee packages, donated by Mr. GILLIES, so that the useful and the ornamental are cleverly combined.

Thirty-seventh-street Church has a very excellent variety of neckties, ladies under-skirts, rag rugs, blankets, and other solid articles.

Seventeenth-street has a magnificently-bound and gilt Bible, 4to, inclosed in a glass case, together with a variety of beautifully-wrought woollen goods, cushions and toilet articles. The old woman who lives in the shoe has so many children she doesn't know what to do—except to sell them.

The Central Church (Seventh-avenue) has a fine variety of silk, lace, and Berlin-wool articles.

Seventh-street has some rich opera cloaks, children's sacks, jackets, &c., and the Corneli Memorial Church, in Seventy-seventh-street—"the youngest child" of New-York Methodism—has a very good stock of books, toys and articles for children's wear.

Tane-street, Thirtieth-street, St. Paul's, Eighteenth-street, Bedford-street and Washington-square Churches have each a large variety of toys, toilet articles, and things common to all. St. Paul's has, besides, a fine Berlin-wool, needle-wrought picture of the scene "Taking Christ down from the Cross." Eighteenth-street has also a very fine gilt glass-covered parlor clock.

Lexington-avenue Church, presided over by Mrs. ALANSON BRIGGS, has a neat glass case of artificial flowers, silver ice-pitcher, a magnificent dressing-room satin cushion, and a valuable and fashionably-dressed doll. Willett-street Church has a lot of parian and china mantel and parlor ornaments. Twenty-seventh-street has also a fine array of flowers in glass cases. The Fair was in a somewhat crude state last night. Goods were still coming in. In adjoining rooms there is an art gallery, a panorama, &c., to which an extra admission of ten cents is charged, and today will be added to these things a collection of California curiosities gathered by Mrs. Dr. NEWMAN of Washington, who is now in the City, and also the old Bible recently brought hither by Rev. W. H. BOOLE, from which SAMUEL WESLEY and his son JOHN for more than forty years together expounded the Word of God. The cloak, spectacles, &c., of Mrs. FLETCHER, and other interesting relics of early Methodists and Methodism will also be on exhibition, and will be well worth paying twenty-five cents to see. Several of the City pastors and friends, other than Methodists, were present last night. The Fair will be continued through this week, and all who desire to purchase should do so before that time. Most of the articles offered for sale are very little higher in price than similar goods can be bought in the stores. There are, however, trinkets and toys there, made by loving and Christian hearts and hands, that are never seen in stores, and that are called forth only by such benevolent enterprises as this Home for the Aged.

SEWARD were appointed a committee of installation. After some jocose resolutions, and a very little serious business, the members partook of a collation, and adjourned.

Meeting of the Newark Board of Trade.

The Newark Board of Trade met last night in their rooms on Broad-street. Mr. JOHN C. JOHNSON and Mr. EDWARD SEELEY were appointed as delegates to the National Board of Trade, which meets in Buffalo on the 7th of next month. Article 15 of the constitution was so changed that hereafter nine members will constitute a quorum instead of thirteen, as heretofore.

The programme of subjects to be discussed at the meeting of the National Board was read and commented on. The Newark Board of Trade figures in the programme by introducing the subject of public lands, and the discussion of the propriety of the presentation of Government lands to private persons, except to actual settlers. The Newark Board is understood to object to the donation of private lands, except on conditions as above mentioned. The Committee was advised in regard to their action at the National Board. Other miscellaneous business was transacted, and the Board adjourned.

WASHINGTON.

Postmaster-General Cresswell on the Result of the Elections—Missouri Politics and Politicians—The Chicago Tribune Out for a New Party—Vermont Marble in the Supreme Court—Interesting and Valuable Statistics.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Evening Star to-night publishes two columns of a talk with Postmaster-General CRESWELL upon the recent elections and the political situation generally. Concerning the result of the elections, Mr. CRESWELL is represented as saying in answer to the question, "How do you view the result at large as directly affecting the Administration?" "Well, as I said before, I am not surprised. The history of all previous Administrations will show you that they have suffered similar treatment. In other words, the election intervening between the Presidential contests has always been and always will be more or less unfavorable to the Administration in power. It is natural that it should be so, for it is a season of apathy, or what politicians call the off year, when the policy of the Administration is only partially developed, has been but briefly discussed, and is not well understood. I was in the Thirty-eighth Congress, which, you remember, was the second of Mr. LINCOLN'S term. We came very near losing the House then. The Border States alone saved us. In fact, we had but a fair working majority, and many of our most important war measures were carried by from fourteen to twenty votes. The Freedmen's Bureau bill, for instance, was adopted by only one majority. So you see there is nothing new in the present condition of affairs. In fact, I think we might have expected it, and I am certain that the President didn't anticipate the re-election of all his friends. I think, on the whole, that we will be better off with the fair working majority which we have in the House than we would with our former power. We were too strong. The members were not compelled to consult with each other. There were too many aspirants for leadership and there was too much opportunity for the display of personal jealousies. We will be free from all this now. There will be no risk of imperium in imperio, rings within rings, and there will be greater and more confidential concert of action. In short, I am very well satisfied with the result." In regard to the future, Mr. CRESWELL is represented as saying: "Looking to the future we have no reason for uneasiness. We are in a condition now to patiently wait for the mistakes which our adversaries are sure to make. We have only to continue the development of our policy to win in the next elections. In other words, we must keep our finances firmly in hand, continue to reduce our public debt, which is the most effective way to maintain the national credit, and at the same time relieve our people as much as possible from taxation. To do all this we are required to maintain a sufficient tariff for revenue. But we must take from the tariff list such articles as sugar, coffee and tea, and rely on luxuries alone for income. We must also relieve our people from internal taxation, because it is the most odious form of collecting revenue. The law which says to a man we assess you so much, and if you do not pay it we will seize and sell your property, is simply oppressive. For that reason, it not for the protection of our home industries, we must keep up, at least, a revenue tariff. When the people see and understand these facts, they will appreciate the mission of the Administration."

CHANGES IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

There is good authority for saying that Secretary DELANO will make no material changes in the personnel of the subordinate officers of the Interior Department at present. Time will be taken for the consideration of the matter, and changes when made will be made with prudence and discretion. Though the removal of Commissioner WILSON, of the Land Office, is generally looked for, there has been no movement or intimation yet in that direction from Secretary DELANO.

MISSOURI POLITICS AND POLITICIANS.

The movement for reading Senator SCHURZ, out of the Republican Party, has no serious basis. There is some talk about it, of course, but the leading men here have sagacity enough to see that such a process is not necessary. The Democrats having carried the State Legislature, the State becomes Senterized as was the case with Tennessee, and there is nothing left for BROWN and SCHURZ to do but to go clear over to the Democracy, or come back into such relations with the Republican Party that the Administration can sustain them. There is no issue between them and the Administration on what they claimed to be the fundamental issue of the contest in Missouri, that of enforcement. The Administration simply thought that they, as Republicans, should have sought their ends through the organization of the party.

POSITION OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

A dispatch from Chicago received here today, announces that the Chicago Tribune has abandoned the Republican Party and come out in favor of the formation of a new political organization, supposed to be in the interest of revenue reform.

MARBLE IN COURT.

A case was up in the Supreme Court today, which excited much interest on account of the specimens of Rutland marble exhibited. There were fourteen large two inch slabs all sawn from one block of what is known to the trade as Brockadilla marble, and the question which the Court is called to decide, is whether the slabs are white within the specification of a contract for delivery of white marble. The Court-room looked like a small grave-yard, and the Judges in their shrouds looked very grave.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.

SIR: I have received from HORATIO WOODMAN, Esq., of Boston, Mass., a letter bearing date the 7th instant, in which he appeals from your decision as to the fee to which he is entitled for his services in presenting the application of JOHN H. HANSON for an invalid pension, No. 141,263. I have not deemed it necessary to send you the letter for a report upon the facts of the case, as I presume that he states them with substantial accuracy. The question he submits arises under the seventh section of the act approved on the 8th day of July last. (United States Statutes at large, volume 16, page 193.) He insists that as no pension certificate has been issued to Mr. HANSON, although the proof was completed before that date, the case is still pending, and his agreement with his client for his fee should be recognized by your office. I am clearly of opinion that whenever a claim for pension has been filed and the testimony completed prior to the passage of said act, so as to justify your office in the allowance of a pension certificate, the agent or attorney's fee should be $10, and no more. I therefore decline to disturb your decision, as it confines Mr. WOODMAN to that amount, the maximum fee allowed under the act of 1864. C. DELANO, Secretary.

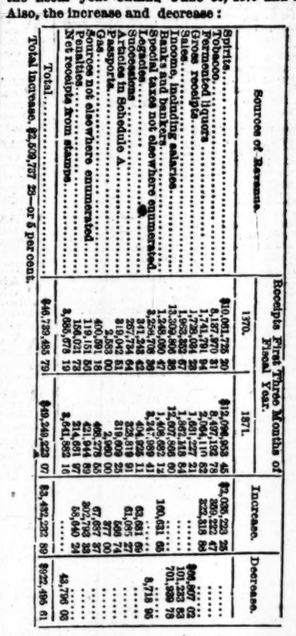
INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

The following is a comparative statement, showing the receipts from the several general sources of revenue for the first three months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1870 and 1871. Also, the increase and decrease:



EXTENT OF OUR TOBACCO MANUFACTURE.

A statement just prepared at the Internal Revenue Office shows at the present time there are 946 persons and firms engaged in tobacco and snuff manufacture. The total amount of the penal sums of the several bonds given by these manufacturers is $7,847,600. The penal sum of each manufacturer's bond in excess of $2,000, which is the minimum sum fixed by law, is computed upon the number of machines and instruments kept for use, so that the amount of a manufacturer's bond becomes, in a degree, the measure of his relative capacity for production. The 946 manufactories reported are distributed among the States in the following manner:

	Amount of bond.
Arkansas, 4 factories	$11,000
California, 9 factories	62,000
Connecticut, 5 factories	19,000
Delaware, 4 factories	50,000
Georgia, 1 factories	65,000
Illinois, 43 factories	367,500
Indiana, 23 factories	108,000
Iowa, 7 factories	27,000
Kentucky, 40 factories	29,400
Louisiana, 21 factories	80,000
Maryland, 19 factories	333,000
Massachusetts, 21 factories	104,000
Michigan, 26 factories	171,000
Minnesota, 1 factory	4,000

Wisconsin, 9 factories	69,000

CIGAR MANUFACTURE.

The number of persons and firms reported engaged in the manufacture of cigars in the United States is 10,827, and the total amount of penal sums of bonds given is $11,374,100. The number of cigar-makers registered, as being employed by the manufacturers, is 45,858. The minimum of a penal sum of a manufacturer's bonds is $500, with an additional $100 for every registered cigar-maker employed.

The following is a comparative statement of the number of manufacturers of cigars in each State, with the amount of the penal sum of the bonds given in each.

UNITED STATES VESSELS IN THE LATE GALES.

Several vessels of the navy were in the recent gales in which such shipwreck and loss of life occurred. They passed through with losses only of spars, boats, &c., notwithstanding the great perils they encountered. Among the vessels which were in the heaviest of the gales were the Saco, Kansas, Nipsic, Shenandoah and Brooklyn.

Harper's Weekly of last Saturday contained an admirable view of the new bridge to be erected between Brooklyn and New-York. The stranger may obtain from it a clear and complete idea of the great work now in process, and also of the cities to be connected. The view extends far out to sea, and thus the picture has a value beyond that connected with the East River Bridge. It is well worth preservation, and we have no doubt there will be a steady demand for it.

AN UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS.—The publishers of Scribner's Monthly have announced the sale of nearly 50,000 copies of their first issue. They print 50,000 copies of the second number, (for December,) also, and now announce an edition of 100,000 copies of the third, or January number of the Magazine. Such a success we believe to be unprecedented in the annals of literature.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

"THE ROAD TO RUIN," AT WALLACK'S.

"The Road to Ruin," as we all, and some among us to our bitter cost know, is not for a day, but for all time. Its moral, as conveyed by HOLCROFT, does not grow stale with repetition, and the pungency of its warnings does not evaporate with the passage of time. Clever portrait painters have a way of so arranging the hair and drapery of a sitter, that the picture shall never afterward look old-fashioned. They avoid the height of the present mode, and yet do not too closely follow the antique. The product has, therefore, a cosmopolitan air, and what it loses in individuality or decision of character, it gains in lasting attractiveness. As it to correspond with its kernel or vital principle the outer covering of the "Road to Ruin" has a similar quality. It has, that is to say, the every-day air or universal applicability that distinguishes SHAKESPEARE'S matchless dramas of passion, and which justifies the ecomium quoted in our first sentence. The people are such as live, or might live, now. They say and do things not peculiar to this or that period, but possible to any. We forget how many years have passed since HALLAM—if we mistake not, the first New-York Goldfinch—brought out the "Road to Ruin" here; but will venture to say that at least as considerable a ratio of the population may profit by the comedy now as were edified by it then. So far as acting goes, that of today is, without doubt, the superior. With all due credit to the old school and its representatives of former generations, this may safely be affirmed: There was less temptation to good actors to emigrate from the old country then than now, and there were fewer good actors to emigrate.

It certainly would not have been easy in either country, or in any theatre, to match the performance of last night at Wallack's. At the same time it must be said that it was a very uneven one. Mr. GILBERT'S Old Dornton comes near to perfection. His delicacy and thorough naturalness, his transitions, the depth of his pathos, and the height of his passion give infinite delight and warrant warm praise. But the effect of his scenes is impaired by the comparative inefficiency of his chief interlocutor. It is no pleasant thing to say of an artist in whom we find so much to esteem, but Mr. CLARKE is unequal to Harry Dornton. He lacks elegance, breeding, figure and variety for the part. It is true that there are few comedians on the stage who combine these essentials in the requisite degree. Adequately to realise the heroes of old-fashioned comedy is given to few in our day, and Mr. CLARKE'S incapacity in this wise is shared by many. But, admitting this extenuation, we cannot but think it a pity when there is an actor of the company quite capable of playing Young Dornton he should remain on such an occasion in the background. We feel compelled to add that Mr. CLARKE was not quite perfect, last night, in the words—a needless aggravation of the difficulties of the situation. Mr. FISHER'S Goldfinch is, in most aspects, a capital impersonation, and deserves to be measured by very high standards. Keeping these in view, it might be suggested that he needs a trace more of airiness, of natural volubility, and of a certain consummate self-possession than he last night discovered, to fill out our ideal of Goldfinch. The performance, nevertheless, was full of neatness and effect, and was withal exceedingly amusing. Mr. STODDART makes one of his best successes as Silky. It is not to our mind quite so strongly contrasted in its smooth, oily villainy with the rough, cynical honesty of Sulky, as the author intended; but it is a very elaborate piece of art, and goes further to establish Mr. STODDART'S claims as a comedian of rank than anything we have seen from him in some time. Miss EFFIE GERMON is clever in Sophia. Miss GERMON always is clever. But she is a little too artful in her artlessness to meet our notion of the character. There is a by no means well-concealed consciousness of the fun of the thing in her manner which impairs the illusion, and which Miss GERMON will do wisely to correct. Mr. LANAGAN, on the other hand, does not make the most of his opportunities to show what a good heart is hidden under Sulky's burr-like exterior; and this lack of plasticity and subtlety of perception injures a bit of acting otherwise highly respectable. Miss MESTAYER makes an excellent Widow Warren, and the minor parts are as usual here, carefully and efficiently sustained. "The Road to Ruin" will be repeated to-night. It is well worth seeing, whether by admirers of the old school or the new.

BOUCICAULT'S NEW PLAY.

Mr. BOUCICAULT'S new drama, "The Rapparee," was successfully represented at Niblo's Theatre last evening. It is not deficient either in interest or in effectiveness, for it appeals, as do all the plays of the same order which Mr. BOUCICAULT has written, to an admiration for bravery and generosity, and a sympathy for youthful, strong and imperiled love, as enduring as it is general. Briefly told, the story runs thus: Roderick O'Malley, the Rapparee Chief, has fallen in love with Grace, the daughter of the President of Connaught, Col. O'Hara, who is not unreasonably suspected of having favored the Jacobite Party. Roderick has successfully persuaded Grace to follow the fortunes of his house to France. The treaty has been signed, but Roderick is not included in the exemption, and he is in imminent danger from the machinations of a subtle rival, Ulick M'Murragh, who has resolved to secure the affianced bride of the Rapparee Chieftain. Col. O'Hara is seriously compromised by the political intrigues he has carried on, and his papers have been seized by the treacherous M'Murragh. M'Murragh takes care to impress upon the father that the treaty which secures a pardon for the rest is not extended to the guerrilla party of which Roderick is the chief. Grace determines to effect the rescue of Roderick, and she swims across the bay to Mona Castle, there to apprise her lover that the soldiers of Willham are being sent to take him prisoner. Roderick has a hiding-place in the ruins of the old castle only accessible when the tide is low, and the rising flood cuts off the means of escape for his pursuers. Nevertheless, the chivalry of O'Malley prevails, and he descends to conduct to a place of safety the men sent to arrest him. In the meantime Grace has reached the room by an exhausting effort, and swoons by the fireside. She is found by M'Murragh, while Roderick has gone to seek refreshments for his guests, and she is borne to an apartment above. Roderick finds the hospitality he has shown is ill requited. A messenger is secretly dispatched to summon the guard. Roderick is determined to sell his life dearly, and he gives instructions to a trusty agent to blow up the castle. The fire breaks forth, when the Rapparee chief hears to his horror that Grace is in the upper room. He tears down a portion of the old paneling, rushes to her rescue, and is seen safely descending a winding stone staircase, bearing her upon his shoulders, while the chamber, broken up by the explosion, falls with a terrific crash amid volumes of flame. In the third act the Rapparee chief lies imprisoned in Clontullagh Castle. Grace has procured his freedom at the price of wedding M'Murragh, but Roderick spurns liberty on such terms and is freed by Duquesne aided by the Rapparees. M'Murragh, it is true, has married Grace on the condition that Roderick shall be liberated, but he has arranged that a party of soldiers shall shoot him if he proceeds beyond a given point. This despicable act of treachery excites the indignation of the men when they learn the true position of affairs, and they refuse to obey orders. At this crisis Grace, who has meditated a deep scheme of vengeance of her own, enters with her husband of an hour, Ulick M'Murragh. Gen. Glenkel has procured a direct pardon from the King. Grace now indicates the purpose for which she came, which was to be made a widow as soon as possible. Ulick is engaged by Roderick in a duel to the death; sword thrusts are rapidly interchanged, but the skill of the Rapparee chief prevails, and with two successive stabs, "that for my love, and that for myself," the villain M'Murragh is effectually disposed of, and Roderick is left free to claim Grace for his bride. There is little room in the course of these incidents

CURRENT NOTES.

Mr. W. S. POMEROY, senior editor of the Bridgeport, Conn., Farmer, died last week. He had been an invalid for upward of ten years.

The porter of the City Hotel, at Fall River, Mass., undertook to light a fire with kerosene a few days since, but before he could effect his purpose the can exploded, and burned one of his hands to a crisp.

A New-Hampshire paper makes merry over the fact that, as a party of Philadelphians were riding in its vicinity last Summer, one young lady remarked, in passing a clump of white birches, that it was "angular how much pains these people took to whitewash their trees clear to the tops."

A farmer at Sweetwater, Tenn., was badly sold the other day by some swindlers in this City, who sent him a package marked gold watches, upon which he had to pay $94. He returned to his own house before viewing his purchase, and there found that he had parted with his money for four pieces of cast-iron.

The movement made at Utica a short time since, with the view of substituting a paid fire department in that city for the volunteer system, has fallen through. A special committee of Aldermen reported in favor of it, but when the Council came to vote there was a tie—nine for and nine against. It is estimated that the additional cost would be about $11,000.

The Odd-fellows of Matteawan, in this State, were sorely exercised, a few days ago, by the receipt of a letter from a prominent brother who was supposed to have died some time previously, and for whom they had gone to the trouble of hanging their lodge-room with emblems of mourning, and engrossing elaborate resolutions of respect, &c.

Some few weeks ago, a young man from the interior of Kentucky, died of the prevailing epidemic at New-Orleans. His brother went on to convey the remains home for burial, was there taken sick with the same disease, and died, also; and then the father of the two went to bring their bodies home, and he, too, was stricken with the fever and died.

A widow, at Louisville, Ky., whose husband died quite suddenly, last week, while on his way further West, was so affected on hearing of her loss, that she took three doses of opium on different days, with the view of destroying her life. Fortunately there was a physician near at hand at each attempt, and she is now considered out of danger.

The Springfield, (Mass.,) Republican asserts that there is a family in that city, each one of the members of which, with a single exception, was born upon a holiday—the father upon the Fourth of July, the mother on Christmas, the first child on Thanksgiving Day, the second on Christmas, the third on Independence Day, the fourth and fifth each on New Year's, the sixth three weeks before Christmas, (slight discrepancy there,) and the seventh on Christmas.

The Pilgrim Society will celebrate in Plymouth, Mass., the 250th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, on Wednesday, the 21st of December next. Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP, of Boston, has accepted an invitation to deliver the oration. The general arrangements for the celebration include a meeting of the Society in Pilgrim Hall, a procession, an oration and services at the Unitarian Church, a dinner, street decoration, fire-works, and a ball in the evening.

A hopeful youth at Kansas City, Mo., being short of money to continue a life of debauchery, hit upon the novel expedient of playing burglar in his own father's house. A few nights since he was in the act of approaching the bed where the old gentleman lay, with a handkerchief saturated with chloroform, when the latter was suddenly awakened, and feeling the sickening influence of the drug upon him, jumped up in time to recognize the form of his son passing through the doorway.

The women of Kansas have acquired such proficiency in the use of fire-arms that they no longer consider it absolutely necessary to have the protection of men. A few nights since, at Lawrence City, in that State, the house of a Mrs. J. M. RUTH being attacked by burglars, the latter rose softly from her bed, seized a revolver, crept cautiously down the stairs, and discharged it at the head of one of the miscreants, who was evidently badly wounded; but he contrived to drag himself off the premises. The report of the revolver alarmed those on watch outside, and they, too, beat a hasty retreat, leaving Mrs. RUTH complete mistress of the situation.

A "miniature monster of the deep," recently captured in the Ohio River, is described by a reporter of the Cincinnati Enquirer as follows: "It is not a serpent or an eel, for it has legs, nor is it a fish, though it has gills. It is not a water dog, nor is it an alligator. In length this animal is probably nine inches. Its body is cylindrical, like that of a serpent, the skin has a snaky texture and look, and is covered with brown spots. The head and mouth resemble those of a catfish, and the eyes are very small. The tail flattens vertically, like that of a fish, but has no sign of a fin upon it. Just back of the eyes are two gills like those of a fish, except that from each of them protrude beautiful, delicate purple plumy tissues. Then it has four delicate short legs, spreading like those of a lizard, but proportionately very much shorter. The legs all terminate in beautiful little bands, the front pair provided with four, the hind pair with five fingers each. Altogether, the animal is as comely in appearance as it is strange in character."

The Proposed Soldiers' Monument at Boston—A Protest Against its Erection.

The following memorial was presented to the Boston Board of Aldermen, last week, by a Committee of the Charles Russell Lowell Post No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, protesting against the expenditure of $75,000 for the erection of a soldiers' monument in that city:

BOSTON, Nov. 7, 1870.

To the Honorable the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Boston:

GENTLEMEN: At a regular meeting of Encampment Charles Russell Lowell, Post No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, held at Boylston Hall, on evening of the 4th inst., the undersigned were appointed a committee to memorialize your honorable body against the proposed erection of a soldiers' monument on Boston Common. In accordance with the above vote, and in proceeding to comply therewith, the Committee respectfully represent that the Grand Army of the Republic is not a political organization, but is composed of men of all shades of politics, and therefore, in the presentation of this paper, represents no political party. We learn that an order for the erection of a monument, and the appropriation of the sum of $75,000 for that purpose, has already been put upon its passage, and that in addition to the sum now buried in earth and stone on Flagstaff Hill. Presuming this to be the fact, we respectfully ask you to consider well the expediency of proceeding further in the matter while hundreds of maimed and sick soldiers and sailors, and the widows and orphans of those whose memories this monument is to perpetuate, are today suffering for the necessaries of life, and are dragging out a mere existence in the cellers and garrets, unknown and uncared for except by those whose sole purpose in banding together is to relieve their distress as far as possible. With the dead it is well—our duty is to provide for the living—for our disabled comrades, and for the widows and orphans of those who died that the nation might live. To ask for bread, and in reply have a monument of stone pointed out to you, is not what the soldiers and sailors of this country expected, or were led to expect, when they left their families to uphold the nation's honor. Your memorialists do not deem it expedient to relate individual cases of extreme suffering which have come under their observation; the recital of them, gentlemen, would make the heart sick; and this suffering, too, in the families of the men whose memories you propose to perpetuate by piling up $75,000 worth of granite. Looking at the erection of this monument in a financial point of view, it works distress to those whom we seek to help. The high rate of taxation is made the excuse for exorbitant rents; and the highest obtainable price for every necessary of life is demanded. Therefore, save your $75,000 and help us yet a little longer. We have no fears that the memory of our dead comrades will fade away, while annually all over the country there is set apart a day for, and devoted to, the very purpose for which the erection of this monument is intended. When those who now perform that sad but beautiful ceremony shall have passed away, and it is known no more forever—when the hands that now strew flowers, and the lips that sing anthems over the graves of our heroes—when they, too, shall be cold in death. Then, if the deeds of those whom you now seek to honor shall be found worthy of perpetuation, the citizens of that day will be no more loth to erect monuments and statues than are the men of to day backward in honoring by monument and statue the heroes of the Revolution. If the $75,000 proposed for this monument must be used, we respectfully ask that until the Grand Army shall cease to exist in the City of Boston, it be placed on interest, and such income from it as may accrue be divided annually among the different posts in the City of Boston, according to the amount of money expended by the Relief Committee of each post for the preceding year, and we most humbly ask that this appropriation be not for a monument of stone, but a "living monument," to which the present and future generations may look back, and, with overjoyed hearts, proclaim, Behold the reward of our noble fallen patriots. In the name of Encampment Charles Russell Lowell, Post of G. A. R.

The Masked Murderers in Tennessee—Operations of the Gang.

From the Lebanon Herald, Nov. 10.

Another of those brutal and dastardly outrages, the perpetration of which, by disguised and lawless scoundrels, is giving our State a most unenviable reputation, was committed on Friday night last. The victim was a negro man, named NATHAN SHORTER, who lived on what is known as "the Fred. Golladay place," about two miles and a half north-east of Lebanon, between the Hartsville and the Hunter's Point pikes. About 12 o'clock on the night above mentioned, a party of men on foot, variously estimated at from five to ten, completely disguised and armed, entered the yard in front of SHORTER'S residence, and called to him to come out. As soon as he appeared on the porch, he was asked if he had a gun. Before he had time to reply, one of the party cried, "Kill the d—d scoundrel!" and another, who carried a shot-gun, immediately fired at SHORTER. The charge, which consisted of seven buckshot, took effect in his breast, and he fell and died almost instantly. The men then went off together. Such are the particulars of the murder, as we have been able to gather them from reliable sources. Various outrages, such as whipping and robbing of other negroes on the same night, by the same party of disguised men, are spoken of. A gun was taken from an old negro in the neighborhood a few hours before, on the same night by a band of disguised men, and it is supposed that this was the same party who committed the murder, and that the gun was taken for that purpose. NATHAN SHORTER was well known by many of our citizens. He was an old man, and had the reputation, among the white people and his own race, of an honest, reliable, industrious and inoffensive negro, who took no part in politics, and attended strictly to his own business. The manner in which he lost his life is universally denounced by all classes of citizens, as a wanton, brutal and cowardly murder. His murderers were disguised with high conical hats of paste-board, and otherwise arrayed in the paraphernalia supposed to be peculiar to the ghostly brotherhood.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Although no sales were made at the Exchange yesterday, (Nov. 14,) the auction rooms were well filled, and the approaching important transactions for this week actively canvassed. The prevailing opinion seemed to be that the general results would be favorable, as owners of real estate were becoming tired of carrying such a heavy line of property, and were anxious to realize. As to prices, opinions differed, but a majority expressed a conviction that the bidding would be spirited, although the averages might not be as large as in an active speculative season. With real estate brokers, the results of this weeks' sales will determine the future of the market for the Fall business. Should they be satisfactory, we learn that several very important sales will immediately be pushed forward to a consummation. In addition to the sales to be made this week, and noticed at length in this column yesterday, DINGEE, KETCHAM & Co. will, on Thursday, the same day of the great sale by MULLER, WILKINS & Co. of Central Park lots, also offer a choice selection of City property, located as follows: One lot on the north-west corner of Broadway and Seventy-third-street; two lots, each on Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth streets, respectively, near Broadway; and five lots on Seventy-eighth-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues. All of this property is desirable, and should bring good prices.

Today, at the Exchange, ROBERTS & McGUIRE hold their large sale of valuable City property. MULLER, WILKINS & Co. will offer a house and lot on Fifth-avenue, fronting on Central Park, and houses and lots on Twenty-third and Seventy-ninth streets. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co. will sell the Allemania Club-house on Sixteenth-street, near Union-square; also six lots on the north-east corner of the Seventh-avenue Boulevard and One Hundred and Twenty-seventh-street; and D. M. SEAMAN will dispose of a large factory property in West Twenty-fifth-street. Full particulars in regard to all these transactions will be found upon reference to our advertising columns.

To-morrow the sale of the Dyckman estate will take place at the Exchange, and in addition A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co. will offer a desirable line of City property.

An auction sale of leasehold property on Houston and Second streets is advertised by Col. JAMES M. MILLER, for Tuesday, the 22d inst.

Taking the average earnings of the railroad, per mile, even at the present time, when the work of the road is being performed on disconnected portions, and computing for the whole distance of 170 miles at the same rate, we obtain an aggregate of $850,000 for gross annual returns. Allowing fifty per cent. for operating expenses, which will be a liberal estimate, until the lapse of time shall have rendered new iron and rails necessary, the result—net earnings—is $425,000, to pay interest on a bonded debt of $20,000 per mile, or more than twelve per cent. on the amount of the mortgage bonds.

From this exhibit it appears that, even at the present moment, holders of the seven per cent. mortgage bonds are amply secured. But it must be borne in mind that at this time an interval of forty miles separates the two portions of the road which are in operation, and therefore that freight moving eastward pays tribute now only to half of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad line, being diverted for through transportation over connecting lines. When the existing gap is finished—which, it is assured, will be by the 1st of December—goods which now pass over one-half will then traverse the whole of the line, thereby doubling the present receipts of the road, even assuming that no increase of the gross amount transported takes place. A glance at the map will show the position.

We may assume, therefore, from the above exhibit of the existing traffic, that the following estimate will represent the income accruing on the completion of the enterprise after the 1st of December.

Receipts on 170 miles from Burlington to Cedar Falls, $8,000 per mile.....$1,356,000
Operating expenses at 50 per cent., (annual rate for first five years).....678,000
Net income.....$678,000
Interest on bonds at 7 per cent. gold, equivalent to 8 per cent. currency.....273,000

Earnings in excess of interest applicable to dividend on stock, being 12 per cent. on amount of stock, say $20,000 per mile.....$405,000

This remarkable exhibit is accounted for by the character of the enterprise and the country through which it runs, and may be explained on the following ground:

First—The Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad is a continuation of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, (the best enterprise in the West,) and it traverses, without competition, the richest portion of Iowa—the most fertile State in the Union—and receives as tributaries the Chicago and Northwest, Rock Island and Pacific, Union Pacific, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Minnesota Central, and Rockford and Rock Island Railroads.

Second—It is the first and only completed Iowa road running in the interest of St. Louis, Chicago, St. Paul, Milwaukee, and the Great Northwest.

Third—It brings Chicago forty-five miles nearer to St. Paul than ever before.

Fourth—It gives the only practicable route from St. Paul to St. Louis, ninety miles nearer than any other route. Its road-bed is in the finest cereal-bearing valley in the world.

Fifth—It has four (4) great initial and terminal points, viz.: St. Paul, St. Louis, Burlington and Chicago, and runs through the finest region in the world for Stock and Grain. Its sources of traffic are immense, both from local and through transportation. The products of the country comprise Timber, Coal, Cereals and Cattle—all in unlimited quantities. The population of the surrounding districts, as shown by the census returns of the past three years, is immense, and increasing at the rate of almost twenty per cent. per annum. This rate of increase must be greatly accelerated by the influx of wealth and population which railway construction always brings with it.

The above statement comprises some of the reasons why the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad is worthy of a place among the first Railways of the land. The stock of the road has been all subscribed to by wealthy parties along the line, and paid in full. The bonds are held at 90, and interest in currency, and are for sale by banks and bankers generally. The greater portion of the whole issue has been disposed of in sums varying from $1,000 to $50,000, and the class of subscribers is largely represented by Trustees of Funds, Cashiers of Banks and Saving Institutions, Insurance Companies and judicious and permanent investors.

The Bonds have 30 years to run, are convertible at the option of the holder into the stock of the Company at par, and the payment of the principal is provided for by a sinking fund. The convertibility privilege attached to the Bonds cannot fail to cause them to sell at par, or command a market-price considerably above par. United States Five-twenties, at present prices, return only 4½ per cent. currency interest, while these Bonds pay 9⅛ per cent., and we may regard them to be as safe and fully equal as a security for any Railroad Bond issued; and until they are placed upon the New-York Stock Exchange, the rules of which require the road to be completed, we obligate ourselves to re-buy at any time any of these Bonds sold by us after this date at the same price as realized by us on their sale.

MR. MUNDELLA'S LECTURE.

Strikes, Arbitration and the Civil Service in England—Lecture by N. J. Mundella, M. P. Sheffield.

Mr. N. J. MUNDELLA, M. P. Sheffield, England, a prominent advocate of the working classes, lectured last evening at the Cooper Union on "Strikes, Arbitration and the Civil Service in England," before an audience representing the respectability and intelligence of New-York. Mr. PETER COOPER, who presided, introduced the lecturer in a few complimentary remarks.

Mr. MUNDELLA then came forward amid great applause and spoke as follows:

When two months ago I landed on your shores, I had no thought or expectation of addressing an American audience. I came to study, not to expound; to learn, not to teach; and I feel that my address this evening requires a brief preface. During my too short stay among you I have endeavored diligently to acquaint myself with your institutions, and to form an impartial estimate of the political and social condition of your country. I shall, therefore, away with me—besides much that will be useful to me as a legislator—a profound conviction of the vast future which is in store for you, if your people and Government rightly appreciate, and wisely use, the glorious inheritance with which God has endowed you. I have seen much to excite wonder; some things to deplore; but much to admire. One distinguishing characteristic which has presented itself to me in every town and city I have entered, and which must command the unqualified admiration of every impartial student, is the unbounded munificence and public spirit of your citizens. A wiser and nobler example of this cannot be found in any country than the institution in the hall of which we are now assembled; and when its trustees requested me to supplement the lecture of my friend, Mr. HUGHES, I did not feel myself at liberty to decline, especially as subjects were touched upon in that lecture of which Mr. HUGHES could only give a sketchy outline, the more complete details of which he urged upon me to supply. This is my apology for addressing you to-night. I feel honored by the presence of this audience, representing so well the capital, labor, and intelligence of the New World. I know you would prefer that I should speak to you with frankness and unreserve, and should any words escape me which jar upon the susceptibilities of my auditory, I must pray you in the words of our SHAKESPEARE, to remember that "all offenses come from the heart," and "never came any from mine that might offend."

EARLY CONDITION OF EDUCATION IN ENGLAND.

My text, which was selected for me, is hardly so wide and comprehensive as I could wish. I shall therefore take the liberty—following the precedent of certain excellent divines—of occasionally wandering from it. I propose to treat briefly of some of those social problems which in England have exercised the hearts and minds of all thoughtful men; to show you how far we have succeeded in our attempts at their solution, and whenever it suggests itself to me that I can usefully point out dangers and pitfalls which the light of our experience would warn you to shun, I shall humbly venture to do so. Probably there are some within the sound of my voice who recollect the state of England prior to the passing of the first Reform bill in 1832. The Government of the country was mainly in the hands of the aristocracy. Rotten boroughs and landlord influence returned a considerable proportion of the members of the House of Commons. Gatton and Old Sarum returned two, and, I believe, had never more than two houses in them. Bramber also sent two, although its population scarcely reached a hundred souls. There were dozens of constituencies, for which the lord of the neighboring hall or castle could have sent to Parliament his footman, or his groom, had it so pleased him, while the great industrial centres, such as Manchester, Birmingham and Sheffield, were altogether unrepresented. Is it surprising that the social condition of our people was such as we now look back upon with horror, and almost with incredulity? In our factories and workshops, children—often mere infants—and women, toiled all hours of the day and night under cruel taskmasters. Boys and girls, men and women, worked together in our mines nearly in a state of nudity. The working classes generally were badly paid, badly housed, clothed and fed. Education was almost wholly unprovided for. What little there was was the result of private benevolence. The recipients of it were often made to feel it was doled out to them in charity, and servile obsequiousness was exacted in return. The rector's and Parliamentary blue books of the time present us with pictures, little short of hideous, of the prevalent want and suffering, ignorance and depravity. This, although greatly ameliorated, is far from being extirpated. With a spirit and resolution worthy of your sires, Englishmen are now manfully grappling with these evils, and I believe, with the help of God, the struggle will not cease until they have rendered Great Britain and Ireland intelligent and virtuous, prosperous and free.

THE REFORM OF 1833.

The Reform bill of 1832 enfranchised the middle and a fair sprinkling of the working class. Although practically it gave the power to the middle class, it enabled the enfranchised masses to make their voices heard to sympathetic ears, and Mr. LUDLOW, one of the ablest of liberal writers treating on the subject that no people under the sun ever made so great an advance during a period of the same duration. It is needful that I should thus advert to our political advancement, because with us political and social progress march side by side. In proportion as we have extended the basis of political power, we have given increased intensity and activity to the national life. In 1833 the cry of the factory children first reached the ears of the Legislature, and scarcely a session has passed from that time to the present in which laws for the protection of children, young persons, and women engaged in various employments, have not been extended and strengthened. Beginning with the factories and mines, we have at length reached the workrooms of the poor seamstress, the fashionable milliner, and the Court dress-maker. No woman or young person, male or female, under eighteen years of age, engaged in the occupations affected by the Factories and Work-shop acts, can be employed more than ten hours in any day, and after the hours of 2 in most, and 4 in some, on the afternoon of Saturday. No child between the ages of eight and thirteen can work more than half time, and during half time must attend two hours a day at school. No woman can enter a mine, or engage in certain other occupations for which nature unfits her. Never has legislation produced more beneficent results. The improvement in the physical and intellectual character of the classes affected, is attested by the ablest observers. The employers, who at first opposed this legislation, are now among its warmest supporters, so satisfied are they of the great blessings it has conferred. We have by no means reached the end of it. Switzerland and North Germany have remodeled their labor laws. No child under twelve years may now enter a factory or engage in a variety of employments injurious to health or interfering with education, and every child in Switzerland must attend the school till the completion of the sixteenth, and in North Germany, of the fourteenth year. We in England have no intention of being left behind by our intelligent rivals; and I ask you, my working brothers, if you could direct your combinations to a nobler end than this? Are there no children of tender years and no women working long hours in the mills of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania? Talk of competition with Chinese labor—what is this to competition with infant labor? The "Heathen Chinee," as one of your humorous poets has lately shown, soon becomes as keen at a bargain or a game of euchre as the Christian Yankee; but women and children, unable or unaccustomed to avail themselves of combination, ought to be the objects of the care and protection of society. For your own sake, for the sake of the health and intelligence of your children, and the future citizens of the Republic, for the sake of the wives and mothers of the next generation, I venture to urge this subject upon your attention, and if any should think I have urged it too strongly let them read the report of the School Board of the City of Fall River for 1868-'69, and I think I shall receive an acquittal.

THE REFORM OF 1867.

The lecturer recounted the advantages which accrued from the Reform bill of 1832, a cheap postage, a free press and untaxed literature, acts prohibiting the payment of wages in kind, the regulation and inspection acts, free libraries and museums, &c., and passed on to the Reform bill of 1867, which doubled the number of electors in England and Wales. When the new and enlarged constituencies were appealed to, national compulsory education was one of the foremost demands of the workingmen. Justice to Ireland was the first fruit of the enfranchisement of England, the abolition of the Irish Church, an entire change in the laws relating to the tenure of land in Ireland were prominent measures in the legislative programme.

The education of the people was one of the questions which occupied the first session of the new Parliament. Have thousands of educational endowments, many of them dating back from the Protestant Reformation, and some of a much earlier date. In the aggregate their value is enormous, and, being entirely uncontrolled by the State the grossest abuses had crept in. When the schools were good, they were monopolized by the noble and the rich. When they were good for nothing, they were left to the poor. In many instances nobody derived any benefit from them but those who had control of the funds; in one the head master had turned the school into a carriage-house, and took two scholars (quite as many, he said, as he wanted) into his own house. Mr. FORSTER'S Endowed Schools bill gave the control and direction of these resources to the Council of Education, and it expected that three years will be occupied in investigation and reorganization. The objects of the bill, as stated by the Minister, were to restore the schools in accordance with the spirit of the intentions of the founders, to render them accessible to the clever poor boys who distinguished themselves in the primary schools, thus stimulating the intellectual energies of the entire people, and declaring, in the words of NAPOLEON "la carrière ouvert aux talents."

This measure has become law, and when the work of reorganization is completed, these high, grammar and classical schools will form the apex of the educational pyramid of England.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

The session of the present year was largely occupied by the discussion of a measure of national elementary education. The task, embittered as it was by sectarian strife, proved exceedingly difficult, and was chiefly rendered so by ancient neglect, and the piecemeal character of modern legislation. Your wise ancestors never founded a colony or State without making provision for education. I doubt if there is a name great in your history, from PENN to WEBSTER, which is not associated with some tribute to its value and importance, and some appeals and injunctions against its neglect. Yet, it was not till the year 1840 that a shilling was voted for this purpose from local or national taxation in Great Britain. The amount of the first grant was £30,000, reduced in the following year to £15,000. In 1845, Mr. LEONARD HORNER, one of our first and ablest factory inspectors, reported that in an area of eight miles by four, comprising the large boroughs of Oldham and Ashton, with a population of over 100,000, there was not a single public day-school accessible to the children of the working classes. After this date, however, education advanced with rapid strides; the thoughtful and intelligent portion of the community—especially the clergy—made great exertions and great pecuniary sacrifices in the work. Not less than £9,000,000 sterling, it is calculated, has been raised for this purpose by voluntary subscriptions during the past thirty years; to this must be added the grants by the State, and the fees paid by the children, each amounting to a like sum. Small as this appears in contrast with your munificent provision, it was an immense achievement as compared with our previous experience, and great results followed thereon. Still a moderate computation showed that two years ago there were 1,000,000 children not attending school, and the conviction deepened in the public mind that no volunteer agency could reach this mass of ignorance, the fruitful mother of weakness, misery, pauperism and crime.

IGNORANCE AN INCENTIVE TO CRIME.

Mr. MUNDELLA then went on to prove that the large percentage of crime in England was due to a want of education among the lower classes, and proceeded to refer to the "religious difficulty" upon which it was feared the Education bill would be wrecked, one party claiming that the schools should be purely secular, and the other that they should be unsectarian, and a third that distinctive religious teaching should be given. Happily the nation was so much in earnest again to permit the frustration of its dearest hopes. The difficulty was bridged over—as I believe, temporarily—by the following compromise: In all existing denominational schools receiving State grants, the religious teaching to be given at the beginning or the end of the school lessons, but any child to be exempted from such teaching whose parents may desire it. In the new national schools, no creed, catechism or formulary may be taught, but the Scriptures may be used by the teacher, with the permission of the School Board.

ENGLAND AND AMERICA—A CONTRAST.

I cannot conclude this part of my lecture without congratulating you on what your country has done and is doing for education. It has been a constant delight for me to go from school to school in the towns and cities I have visited, and, without fearing to incur the reproach of flattery, I can say, familiar as I am with the school systems of Europe, that in private munificence, in public liberality, in the beauty, comfort, order, and arrangement of your schools, you surpass the world; but I should be uncandid if I did not frankly tell you that North Germany and Switzerland excel you in the thoroughness and universality of their systems, and that, I believe, is entirely owing to the fact that in those countries the parent has not the right to deprive the child of the excellent training which the State has provided. When the parent fails in his duty, the State stands in loco parentis, and this is what you chiefly need to perfect your educational system.

I have ventured upon these friendly criticisms because I am satisfied your country possesses the means and the opportunity of becoming first in intellectual, as it is undoubtedly first in material prosperity. Free from external enemies, no wasted years of military training are required from the nation's youth. Benefactions of $10,000,000 to two years, for the advancement of the higher branches of education, evidences generosity and an appreciation of intellectual culture, unparalleled, so far as I know, in the world's history. Free schools, free colleges and free universities are sources of national power and wealth greater than California mines and boundless prairies. Events present to every mind attest this. "Not the needle-gun, but higher education has conquered us," was the exclamation of an Austrian savant in 1866. JULES SIMON, in addressing the French Chambers two years ago, said, "Show me the nation that has the best schools, and I will show you the premier nation. If the world does not acknowledge this today, it will do so to-morrow." How prophetic of that demoralization which ignorance has entailed upon France.

CHANGES IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

He next reviewed the recent important changes in the appointments of civil service, which Mr. BRIGHT characterized as a system of out-door relief for the aristocracy. The old system of obtaining appointments by political influence was now happily at an end, merit and worth were only rewarded, and I am proud to say that I brought a stand to you to-night the representative of one of the largest constituencies in England, I am without the power to influence in the smallest degree the appointment of a Custom-house officer or exciseman. The postal service was completely rescued from the influence of politics, and it was now as well served as any private department in Great Britain.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The lecturer proceeded to consider the question of labor and capital as affecting this country, with its immense natural resources. Combinations, he asserted, were not in themselves reprehensible, and were only to be deprecated when the means were opposed to freedom, order and good government. Combinations of capitalists were not less common than those of labor, for masters, were always in a sort of tacit but constant and uniform combination not to raise wages above their existing level. He sincerely advocated all co-operative and industrial partnerships, and the establishment of boards of conciliation for the settlement of all disputes. From personal observation and experience, he was convinced of their efficacy, and a test, he assured them, would be productive of the happiest results. It was not legitimate for working men to press, or intimidate, or council outrages on their fellow-workman. Every man had a right to his freedom, whether he be a, trades-union man or not. It appeared to him, also, that instead of asking for legislation to share the profits of their employers, they were asking for legislation which was silly on the face of it. Every man had a right to work as many hours as he wished, with the strength and talents God had given him, and a calm consideration would convince the working men of this country that their efforts should be directed to the attainment of other purposes, and to this end they would do well to follow the action of the English working men.

CONCLUSION.

And now my task is ended. No words of mine can express—I wish my tongue could utter—the thoughts that arise within me. No words of mine can express the kindness I have received from all classes since I have been among you. I return to my English home delighted with the American people. But if there is a fault in the republican government of your country, it is magnified when it gets to Europe, and we, liberals, hear them. May Heaven guard the altar in which the fires of liberty flame in this country. [Great cheering.] And while I thank you and thank the many friends I see around me for the more than kindness I have received at their hands, for the affectionate welcome I have always had from them. I pray, most sincerely, that God will bless this country and this people, and when you hear or speak of me you may say of me as was said of the Roman of old: "He never despaired for the republic." [Great cheering.]

WOMAN IN EUROPE.

Her Social Position, Dress, Strength and Aspirations—Lecture by Rev. Samuel Osgood, D. D.

Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD delivered a very interesting lecture last evening at the Sunday-school room of St. Ann's Church, Eighteenth-street, near Fifth-avenue, in aid of St. Ann's Free Church for Deaf Mutes. The subject of the lecture was "Woman in Europe," and the late extensive travels of the reverend gentleman in the countries which he described, and his mature judgment entitle him to the honor of being considered a weighty authority on any very interesting topic. The room was densely crowded, and great anxiety was manifested by many of the fair American ladies to hear a true account of the position of their sisters on the other side of the Atlantic.

Mr. OSGOOD said: The interests of Europe and America are becoming more and more alike, and to them is entrusted the civilization of the world, and as political differences and animosities are dying away, social questions are occupying more attention, and among these the "relation of labor to capital" and the "relation of woman to man" are the two most important. The great social problem for the development of the next thirty years will be the reconstruction of society based on personal liberty. The woman's rights question, he said, was not the subject of his lecture, but a simple, unpretending and truthful account of woman in Europe. The first impressions that an American in Europe forms of woman is, that there exists a certain subordination of woman to man unknown here, and a certain estimation of woman partly shared in here. In their relationship with regard to property man is lord, and woman his dependent. The lecturer then pointed out how in England this was peculiarly recognizable, and showed how the subordination of woman to man is stamped on the civil law which governs Europe, and recommended American ladies who go abroad not to marry into the Latin race. He then described woman's position in French society, and illustrated it by a picture, which, he said, might be often seen in the Belle France, a gay and beautiful bride standing before the altar with an old, bald-headed, but rich husband at her side. The strangest picture of modern society is the devotion of woman to dress, a subject in which men are less interested than women give them credit for. The triumph, he said, of the new art of dress would be accomplished when woman was recognized as the main thing, and clothes the secondary. The subordination of woman strangely leads to her being worshiped, and he mentioned it as a wonderful fact that in one of the churches in Switzerland, devoted to the worship of May, the seats of the women have low backs while those of the men have high backs. He then referred to the superiority of vigorous health possessed by European ladies over American, and related several amusing incidents illustrative of this fact. In England, especially, this vigorous robustness of constitution is observed. He regretted the want of physical strength in American ladies, who preferred to cultivate European delicacies and soft manners rather than the former, and said that the spread of liberal ideas in this country had enervated woman, while it strengthened man. A spirit of caste prevails in Europe, which keeps woman generally in the grade in which she was born, while men can elevate themselves to any position in society. The lecturer then ably discussed the various efforts which are being put forth in Europe for the advancement of woman, and concluded by passing a high eulogium on her beauties and her virtues. While, he said, man and woman are equal in many things, he must recognize a certain subordination in woman—man must be her protector, and if needs be, must fight for her and die for her.

Rev. THOS. GALLAUDET, pastor of the Mission Chapel, added much to the force of the lecture, by following it in the deaf-mute language, and his mutely eloquent gestures, aptly illustrated the flowery Anglo-Saxon of Mr. OSGOOD.

"WOOING AND WEDLOCK."

Discourse of Rev. Samuel D. Burchard Before the Eastern Branch Young Men's Christian Association.

Rev. Dr. S. D. BURCHARD delivered a lecture last night before the Eastern Branch Young Men's Christian Association, at the corner of Grand-street and East Broadway. The hall was well filled, and the audience seemed greatly entertained with the subject, "Wooing and Wedlock," and the manner in which it was discussed. The lecturer gave a sketch of the wooing by BENJAMIN FRANKLIN of Miss READ, who subsequently became his wife, though in the outset she jilted him and married an unworthy man, who already had one wife living. The case was cited as an illustration of the sinfulness of flirting. When a young woman felt, said the lecturer, that the young man who is addressing her is in earnest and is worthy of her, she should be frank and treat him honorably. A man should seek to make himself worthy of the woman he adores. He should swear

"Fortune, wealth and fame I would win
For one bright smile from thee," instead of saying

"Fortune, wealth and fame I would give
For one bright smile, &c."

The lecturer illustrated this sentiment by relating the story of JOHN NEWTON, who was outwardly a most unattractive person, and always dressed in the most uncouth manner. He paid his addresses to a young lady who did not regard the exterior of the man, but admired the noble qualities of head and heart. The story of his wooing was told by the lecturer in eloquent words, and he drew a fine pen-picture of the spot whereon he told his tale of love, and the manner in which his suit was accepted. After the couple were betrothed, the lady, though occasionally mortified by the jeers of her friends at their remarks upon the uncouth character of her lover, did not seek to correct his slovenly habits, but, instead, made a compact with him that before they wedded he should write a book which should make his name famous throughout the land. He performed his task, and his work did indeed become celebrated. The lecturer referred to the mutual duties which husbands and wives owed each other, and remarked that after marriage men should always treat their wives with the same delicate tenderness and affection that they did while wooing them—that they should never cease to be lovers. There ought to be forbearance on the part of the wife, and an earnest effort on her part to retain her husband's love and continually stimulate him to noble efforts. Above all things, they should always work together in all things for their mutual welfare. The lecturer was loudly applauded at the close of his discourse.

NEW-YORK.

ISAAC ROSENTHAL was arrested yesterday, to answer a charge of bigamy, and was duly arraigned before Justice HOGAN. It appears that the prisoner married Miss FERGER ISAACS some ten years ago, in the town of Troslabig, in Russian Poland, according to the forms of the Jewish Church, and that he deserted his wife and three children in the City of London, three years ago. The wife arrived in this City a few days ago, with her children, in search of her truant spouse, only to find him married to Miss BEILER FEILER. As the complainant produced two witnesses to her marriage, and others who saw the second marriage ceremony performed, the Magistrate held the accused for trial.

Officer FITZPATRICK, of the Nineteenth Precinct, last evening arrested a man at the corner of Fifty-second-street and Second-avenue, who was drunk and disorderly and started with him for the Station-house in Fifty-ninth-street. An industrious contemporary published recently as a fact, that an order had been issued directing the officers and clerks attached to the civil Courts, to wear a specified uniform. It is hardly necessary to say that this report is a pure fiction, the offspring of some far-reaching imagination.

DAVID DEMILT, of Port Washington, who was arrested charged with stealing eighty bushels of oysters from the beds of JAMES TILLEY, was the defendant. He admitted that he had taken a small quantity of East River oysters of inferior quality. A large number of experts were examined on both sides. NEW-JERSEY.

Yesterday morning, the wife of Ex-Alderman J. V. THURSTON, of Jersey City, while driving in a pony phaeton, was struck by the tongue of a lager-beer wagon, and seriously if not fatally injured. Mrs. THURSTON was driving in Montgomery-street, Jersey City, and when near Henderson-street, was met by the beer wagon, driven by a German, named CHARLES HERMANN. The pole of the wagon, which was being driven at a reckless rate of speed, tore off the top of the phaeton, and striking Mrs. THURSTON as it passed, broke her arm and inflicted very serious injuries on her side and breast. The pony, frightened by the collision, ran away uncontrolled, but was finally stopped by a policeman. HERMANN, on seeing the result of the accident, whipped up his horses and attempted to escape. He was, however, arrested by Officer KENNY, and held by the City Judge.
